

Providence College

DigitalCommons@Providence

History & Classics Student Scholarship

History & Classics

4-22-2020

“Este pueblo deicida”: The Roots of Antisemitic Nationalism during Argentina’s Década Infame, 1930-1943

Shannon Moore
Providence College

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.providence.edu/history_papers_proj

Part of the History Commons

Moore, Shannon, “Este pueblo deicida”: The Roots of Antisemitic Nationalism during Argentina’s Década Infame, 1930-1943” (2020). History & Classics Student Scholarship. 22.
https://digitalcommons.providence.edu/history_papers_proj/22

This Poster is brought to you for free and open access by the History & Classics at DigitalCommons@Providence. It has been accepted for inclusion in History & Classics Student Scholarship by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@Providence. For more information, please contact dps@providence.edu.

*"Este pueblo deicida": The Roots of Antisemitic Nationalism during Argentina's Década Infame, 1930-1943*

"The existence of a Hebrew imperialism is undeniable."

Fr. Gustavo Franceschi,
1933

"Judaism is a declared and active enemy among every people in general, and especially among Christian people."

Fr. Julio Meinvielle, 1936

"For Catholics, the existence of a large Israeli collective constitutes a permanent reason for fear."

Manuel Gálvez, 1932

Why Does it Matter?

This project serves as a case study on how nationalist movements employ historical revisionism and mythologized identities to divide diverse populations in categories of belonging and unbelonging.

By Shannon Moore