Plea For Reason

Gregory Smith, sophomore class president, has been told by the Rev. Walter J. Heath, O.P., not to take meals in Raymond Hall until he has cut his hair. In protest of this personal action by the Assistant Dean of Men, Smith and a number of his supporters have staged a counterdemonstration of taste by immature exhibitors.

Admittedly the tenor of the sit out was not as tasteful as possible, but that aside, Smith's action seems just. Critics say that his action was out of order and liable to severe penalty. On the other hand, we question the justness and reasionalness of Fr. Heath's action which precipitated the situation. Fr. Heath made his decision as an individual rather than as a College official.

Apart from the question of disciplinary action against Smith is the question of hair itself. Presumably the matter is under study by the appropriate committee. Any recommendations for a change in the ruling on hair at this time would risk being misdirected as more emotionalism. However, enough has filtered down to the student body to leave the impression that no rule is so sacrosanct that it cannot be changed. This should be considered in any judgement made about Smith. To destroy a man's career for the sake of so tenuous a premise that long hair is unbecoming of a Providence College student would be unwarranted. Likewise, to deny a student the right to protest in the manner that best beholds the circumstances would be a gross injustice.

President Issues Strong Rebuke

(Statement by Fr. Haas)

Providing men with an education for 48 years without any evidence of harm to their personal development because of the discipline imposed.

The regulations pertaining to attire and grooming are substantially the same as those in the present day professional and business world wherein courtesy, style, order and norms of conduct are never the enemies of mature and free men. The deliberate maintenance of civilised formalities in an academic institution is part of the history of higher education in the western world.

We lament the treatment of every fact of life as merely casual and intend to preserve some semblance of good taste by immature exhibitors.

Few of the regulations at the college are considered so sacrosanct that they cannot be revised. In the interest of change and enlightenment, however, we expect students to bear the burden of regulations which they freely accept by enrollment.

Contempt and the arbitrary rejection of regulations would spell the end of any civilized enterprise, professional, political, or business.

Fr. Smith has not been denied food service in our dining hall. He was informed Monday that his continued attendance at the formal evening meal without a haircut would be considered an act of contempt.

He was notified last Monday evening that he is to appear before the Committee on Discipline to explain his continued refusal to observe college regulations.

Even though Mr. Smith has informed the college that he intends to transfer from here next year to a school abroad, where he says he has already been accepted, the college administration nevertheless feels that while he remains here he will be subject to the same rules and regulations that the other students are.

---

500 Demonstrate

A hunger strike and demonstrations have been going on at the college for the past two days led by Greg Smith, a freshman.

The demonstrations have been conducted to protest the Rev. Walter J. Heath, O.P., who has refused to allow Mr. Smith to enter the dining hall until he has a haircut. As a consequence, Smith began his hunger strike and will continue it indefinitely.

The incident has received large coverage in the press, television and radio throughout the Northeast. The Providence Journal ran a front page story with extensive coverage and a photo on Greg Smith, WBZ, a Boston radio station, carried the episode on its evening news and the New York Times has made note of Mr. Smith's protest.

Smith, shot from a light rain by a large poncho, sat on the front steps of Raymond Hall Thursday afternoon until he was accompanied by about 25 students, mostly of his Floor, to which he was lined up along with him. Some of the demonstrators carried signs expressing support for Greg Smith, while others made comment when questioned about the controversy as support for a New York newspaper which he would make "no comment" for such a "low level cause."

Greg Smith, Sophomore class president, has been told by the Rev. Walter J. Heath, O.P., not to take meals in Raymond Hall until he has cut his hair. In protest of this personal action by the Assistant Dean of Men, Smith and a number of his supporters have staged a counterdemonstration of taste by immature exhibitors.

Admittedly the tenor of the sit out was not as tasteful as possible, but that aside, Smith's action seems just. Critics say that his action was out of order and liable to severe penalty. On the other hand, we question the justness and reasionalness of Fr. Heath's action which precipitated the situation. Fr. Heath made his decision as an individual rather than as a College official.

Apart from the question of disciplinary action against Smith is the question of hair itself. Presumably the matter is under study by the appropriate committee. Any recommendations for a change in the ruling on hair at this time would risk being misdirected as more emotionalism. However, enough has filtered down to the student body to leave the impression that no rule is so sacrosanct that it cannot be changed. This should be considered in any judgement made about Smith. To destroy a man's career for the sake of so tenuous a premise that long hair is unbecoming of a Providence College student would be unwarranted. Likewise, to deny a student the right to protest in the manner that best beholds the circumstances would be a gross injustice.

---

By GREG SMITH

At the beginning of this academic year Fr. Heath told me to get a haircut or I go before the board. I did. Two months ago Mr. Newton told me to get a hairstyle or I go before the board. I did. This past Monday Fr. Heath told me I could not enter the dining hall until I had a haircut. I did not.

But the length of my hair, or anybody's for that matter, is not the question here. Must a person constantly have before a rule that he feels is senseless, and that the administration is changing. I don't believe so. I was never raised that way. But the spirit of some people on the campus seems to be that a rule is a rule, immutable, not to be broken, never to be defied, no matter how harmful the rule is. I protest.

I protest this attitude. I protest the inability of men to act like men on this campus. I protest the strongarm policies of the administration, I protest their right to tell me as a dignified human being, what to wear and how to wear it. I protest the action of Fr. Heath, the action which has not permitted me to eat for over 48 hours.

But am I really protesting, or just exercising my rights? Am I really doing this as a principle, or just because I like my hair long? Would anyone face expulsion and the loss of $1,500 for two inches of hair? Would anyone be so petty as to put a student out for two inches of hair? These are the questions I've asked myself.

For the past two years I have constantly tried to serve my class, my school, and my self respect. But apparently that has not been enough. Today I will face the disciplinary board on a charge of disobedience to a direct order. Have I in fact disobeyed anyone. Have I not re­ceived a haircut when told? Do the charges stem from my disobedience?

There is something much deeper in the motives of the administration in bringing me before the board. For the first time a student has said, "I will not serve false gods" and it is for this reason that I will be tried tomorrow. But this trial will not be before my peers, but before the administration. Will I have a chance?

There comes a time, hopefully, in every man's life, when he must make a choice between what is easy but wrong, and difficult but right. I speak in terms of right and wrong because that is what I am facing. I firmly feel that I am in the right, and that the oppressive administration is wrong in forcing me, otherwise, to yield to any individual.

The question finally comes to the fact that I have the duty to act in the way I feel is right. It would be morally wrong for me to act in any way but this way.

I will eat again when the administration tells me that I may. I will eat again when the administration tells me that I may.

---

Smith’s Position On Controversy

The incident has received large coverage in the press, television and radio throughout the Northeast. The Providence Journal ran a front page story with extensive coverage and a photo on Greg Smith, WBZ, a Boston radio station, carried the episode on its evening news and the New York Times has made note of Mr. Smith's protest.

Smith, shot from a light rain by a large poncho, sat on the front steps of Raymond Hall Thursday afternoon until he was accompanied by about 25 students, mostly of his Floor, to which he was lined up along with him. Some of the demonstrators carried signs expressing support for Greg Smith, while others made comment when questioned about the controversy as support for a New York newspaper which he would make "no comment" for such a "low level cause."

Gregory Smith, sophomore class president, has been told by the Rev. Walter J. Heath, O.P., not to take meals in Raymond Hall until he has cut his hair. In protest of this personal action by the Assistant Dean of Men, Smith and a number of his supporters have staged a counterdemonstration of taste by immature exhibitors.

Admittedly the tenor of the sit out was not as tasteful as possible, but that aside, Smith's action seems just. Critics say that his action was out of order and liable to severe penalty. On the other hand, we question the justness and reasionalness of Fr. Heath's action which precipitated the situation. Fr. Heath made his decision as an individual rather than as a College official.

Apart from the question of disciplinary action against Smith is the question of hair itself. Presumably the matter is under study by the appropriate committee. Any recommendations for a change in the ruling on hair at this time would risk being misdirected as more emotionalism. However, enough has filtered down to the student body to leave the impression that no rule is so sacrosanct that it cannot be changed. This should be considered in any judgement made about Smith. To destroy a man's career for the sake of so tenuous a premise that long hair is unbecoming of a Providence College student would be unwarranted. Likewise, to deny a student the right to protest in the manner that best beholds the circumstances would be a gross injustice.

---

500 Demonstrate

A hunger strike and demonstrations have been going on at the college for the past two days led by Greg Smith, a freshman.

The demonstrations have been conducted to protest the Rev. Walter J. Heath, O.P., who has refused to allow Mr. Smith to enter the dining hall until he has a haircut. As a consequence, Smith began his hunger strike and will continue it indefinitely.

The incident has received large coverage in the press, television and radio throughout the Northeast. The Providence Journal ran a front page story with extensive coverage and a photo on Greg Smith, WBZ, a Boston radio station, carried the episode on its evening news and the New York Times has made note of Mr. Smith's protest.

Smith, shot from a light rain by a large poncho, sat on the front steps of Raymond Hall Thursday afternoon until he was accompanied by about 25 students, mostly of his Floor, to which he was lined up along with him. Some of the demonstrators carried signs expressing support for Greg Smith, while others made comment when questioned about the controversy as support for a New York newspaper which he would make "no comment" for such a "low level cause."

Greg Smith, sophomore class president, has been told by the Rev. Walter J. Heath, O.P., not to take meals in Raymond Hall until he has cut his hair. In protest of this personal action by the Assistant Dean of Men, Smith and a number of his supporters have staged a counterdemonstration of taste by immature exhibitors.

Admittedly the tenor of the sit out was not as tasteful as possible, but that aside, Smith's action seems just. Critics say that his action was out of order and liable to severe penalty. On the other hand, we question the justness and reasionalness of Fr. Heath's action which precipitated the situation. Fr. Heath made his decision as an individual rather than as a College official.

Apart from the question of disciplinary action against Smith is the question of hair itself. Presumably the matter is under study by the appropriate committee. Any recommendations for a change in the ruling on hair at this time would risk being misdirected as more emotionalism. However, enough has filtered down to the student body to leave the impression that no rule is so sacrosanct that it cannot be changed. This should be considered in any judgement made about Smith. To destroy a man's career for the sake of so tenuous a premise that long hair is unbecoming of a Providence College student would be unwarranted. Likewise, to deny a student the right to protest in the manner that best beholds the circumstances would be a gross injustice.