The Prose Poem: An International Journal

Volume 2 | 1993

Windows
Russell Edson

© Providence College

The author(s) permits users to copy, distribute, display, and perform this work under the following conditions: (1) the original author(s) must be given proper attribution; (2) this work may not be used for commercial purposes; (3) the users may not alter, transform, or build upon this work; (4) users must make the license terms of this work clearly known for any reuse or distribution of this work. Upon request, as holder of this work’s copyright, the author(s) may waive any or all of these conditions.

As to what can be seen through a window. It depends. If the window is properly aimed one might see into another window just across the way. Then one sees a puppet working a pork chop, dividing it with a steak knife, like a surgeon operating with a scalpel; putting pieces of the patient in his mouth.

The puppet is having applesauce with his pork chop. Just like me. I'm having applesauce with my pork chop, too...