Benefits of College
By Jacqueline J. Adams

Going to college benefits students personally and economically, and the benefits increase with each additional year a student spends on campus, according to a report prepared for the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education.

The report, A Degree and What Else? The Correlates and Consequences of a College Education, was prepared by staff members of the Institute for Social Research at the University of Michigan. It is a review of previous research and does not contain new findings.

Some Attributes. According to the report, those who go to college tend to be:

- More satisfied with their jobs.
- Better-paid and less likely to become unemployed.
- More careful consumers.
- More likely to participate in politics and community activities.
- More liberal politically.
- Better-informed about community, national, and world affairs.
- More sensitive in relationships with other people.
- More critical of themselves and their peers.
- More concerned with aesthetic and cultural values.

Sensitized to Social Issues
A person is confronted with the social issues of the day and sensitized to them, and those concerns predominate in later life, the report said. For example, people who went to college during the 1960's are still greatly interested in economic matters. Students of the early 1960's are most concerned about desegregation and racism.

The researchers note that "impact accumulates over generations": students whose parents were college-educated "reflect more college impact than those whose parents were not.

College attendance also accentuates some problems of society, the report said, including:

- Prolonging of youth with its inherent tensions.
- Conflict between the younger generation and the less-educated older generation.
- Conflict within the generation between those who go to college and those who do not.
- Conflict between those with liberal and conservative points of view on social issues.

College Enrollment
Predicted to Decline

A 6-per-cent rise in college and university enrollments this fall may heighten the fastest-growing level of education, according to estimates by the U.S. Office of Education. But the increase comes at a time when some population experts are saying that college enrollments may start to decline in the 1980's.

The forecast is based on findings from the 1970 census of a startling drop in the child population under five years old over the past decade. The decline, about 15.5 per cent, is the greatest drop in 120 years, says the Washington Center, and coincides with a marked rise in the number of young adults in the principal child-bearing age range of 25-29.

Decline in Under-Five Group

That forecast is based on findings from the 1970 census of a startling drop in the child population under five years old over the past decade. The decline, about 15.5 per cent, is the greatest drop in 120 years, says the Washington Center, and coincides with a marked rise in the number of young adults in the principal child-bearing age range of 25-29.

George Grier, who prepared the center's analysis, says it means that college enrollments probably will drop in the 1980's unless the number of high school graduates going on to college exceeds the 65 percent level.

Planned Parenthood Discussed by Sally McGovern

Last week's meeting of the Sociology Club, held in the Rathskeller, produced a large turnout. Sally McGovern is an active member of the Planned Parenthood staff at Lying-In Hospital, and presented a brief movie and a follow-up discussion on birth control and the significance of Planned Parenthood. The film, which was geared to a high-school level, was considered by those attending the meeting. Contraception in its various procedures and forms was the topic of the film.

After the film was shown, Mrs. McGovern followed with a question and answer period. Many questions dealing with the legality of the Planned Parenthood organization were discussed. Some of those who attended found that the Planned Parenthood could legally dispense contraceptives to girls as young as sixteen. The organization feels that the question of morality should be left to the individual. However, the Planned Parenthood staff at Lying-In does offer the service of an out-patient psychiatrist. One of the main objectives of the organization is to provide pertinent information for anyone concerned.

During the course of the question and answer period, both the audience and Mrs. McGovern commented on the scarcity of birth-control information available at Providence College. She emphasized the convenient location of Lying-In Hospital and invited all those interested to visit their facilities.

The next Sociology Club meeting will feature Kenneth Shea, speaking on the subject of Urban Development.

A Eulogy To Education

Two roads diverged in a yellow wood . . . .

Now that I have you wondering what the heck this editorial is about, I might as well not tell you. The best I can do is give a hint in the form of a short story which is of no consequence to anyone, but familiar to everyone.

Once upon a time, (I've come a long way), oh . . . about three and one half years ago, a group of six hundred and eighty-eight bright-eyed and bushy-tailed boys got the smart idea of going to college. They had heard stories of wild parties, orgies, all night drunks and basketball games. So, with these thoughts in mind, the boys quickly decided that college was for them. After all, everyone needs an education at least once in his life. Well, to get on with it, these boys searched and studied and finally found the college of their choice. The institution was situated in a dingy little city about a stones throw from Boston and a jog from New York City.

Alas! They decided to enter college in September. After a summer of fun and sun and preparation, the boys entered C.U.S. at last. Then all sorts of things started to happen, bad things. They found out that College University School didn't allow parietals, but since they didn't know what parietals were, they stayed for the second semester. All the orgies were correctly distributed, and only a small percentage of the boys experienced what could come close to an orgy at the Friday night mixups, (at a dollar a head, they thought they were getting a bargain).

So, half way through the second semester, the boys sat down to elect their leaders. The boys howled for more beer and better mixups with only mondos over twelve allowed in. The officers smiled and made all kinds of promises which made the boys cuss and swear and walk out perfectly satisfied.

After a brilliant year where all the boys made the "See the Dean's List", everyone was looking forward to a second year at C.U.S. The semester passed quickly and September was welcomed with anticipation of what was going to happen. You see, they were all veterans now. But then a terrible thing happened which caused a division within the ranks of the boys. The C.U.S. administration had instituted a new extra-curricular activity called classes. Well, as if the other disappointments were not enough. There is no need to say that the whole matter caused considerable problems - half of the boys vomited all night. But a small group of the boys decided to join the class club. The rest of the students resisted. They said they were too busy going to college. Of course the administrators came apart at the seams. After all, they had hired people who were going to organize the club's activities. There was a great struggle, but finally the small group of boys, backed by the administration and organizers, won out on a compromise. They decided that everyone would join the new club only if members had to go to six meetings each semester. Oh! The administration was happy, and so were the organizers who were about to collect unemployment compensation. Once again, C.U.S. was a united community.

The latter part of the second year went by with hardly a problem and then came the third year. As far as everyone was concerned, all was well on the campii. The boys howled for their beer, got an education, and they were doing well.

The parties began to get bigger and the drunks longer. But that day. They were the odd balls who had nothing important to do concerned, all was well on the campii. The boys drank their beer, getting an education, and they were doing well.

Now the boys were in the second semester of their last year. The parties began to get bigger and the drunks longer. But that small group of boys foolishly continued to attend class club meetings. The rest of the boys didn't bother, they were too busy getting an education, and they were doing well.

At the end of the last year the boys were lined up for graduation. They felt hot and Sally so no one showed up for the ceremony except the small group of odd balls who had nothing better to do. The others couldn't be bothered. They were too busy planning for the future. They had gotten an education at C.U.S. and were ready to demonstrate their talents and make their alma mater proud.

Fortunately, they all got jobs with high salaries and contributed heavily to the alumni fund. They continued to feel sorry for that small group of odd balls for at the fifth year reunion, those students who attended all of the class club meetings were now permanent members.

. . . and I, I chose the one less traveled by, and that made all the difference.
Sports Splash

Providence College fans and students turned out by the hundreds yesterday in a touching send-off for the P.C. Water Polo Fighting Friars. The Friars, rated fourth in the nation, went on to win the third straight A.A.U. National Swimming Tournament.

The Friars' battle cry was heard throughout the arena as they smashed opponents with a record-breaking performance.

> "Coach Havit, what's your strategy for the next game?"

> "You don't say." — Coach Havit

> "Coach, that's exactly what I was telling the fans." — Bill the Fighting Friar

> "Sure, and controversial, too, right?"

> "You don't say." — Coach Havit

The Friars should be in peak form for their upcoming matches. Their strategy and physical fitness will undoubtedly carry them to victory in the upcoming championships.

Off And Running: Wallace

By Gene Gouise

Governor George Corley Wallace, who is running again for the Presidency, this time as a Democrat. His goal is to capture the Democratic nomination for the 1972 election. The key to Wallace's success lies in his ability to draw support from the American Independent Party (now simply called the American Party) and the American Independent Party (now simply called the American Party). These two parties are not altogether clear. Why abandon the Party he has helped to build, and now to join with one he did not? Well, the fact is that the American Party is alive and well and counting on George Wallace to be their "nominee." Why, then, the run in the Democratic Party? It is because the Democratic Party can be only a smattering of the Republican ticket. It could well mean a post-season bid for the Republicans. The Republicans have a strong lineup of candidates, including George McGovern from South Dakota and Hubert Humphrey from Minnesota. But, even if the Republicans do not come in second in the election, they may well come in third. If they do, then the Democrats have a chance to win.

Last night I made an inaugural appearance on the Dick Cavett Show. Dick asked me the question of my interest in being a candidate for the Presidency. I replied that the Democratic Party has a strong line of candidates, including George McGovern from South Dakota, Hubert Humphrey from Minnesota, and John Lindsay from New York. I said that I would be happy to serve as a delegate to the Democratic Convention.

The Beatles in Retrospect

by Tom Lyons

The only problem in Fribourg is finally leaving it silently acknowledged by those present as a pure adolescent arrest of mild wonder in architecture mountains, trains, art, and outside the classroom and particular textbooks, on narrow winding cobblestones in town and pasty warm Sunday mornings.

Venice signaled the going, the near end of that time as a fifth grade grammer school museum tour, a flourish, a group weekend to Venice. Beer floating station tour, a flourish, a group weekend if they knew what they were near end of that time as a fifth warm Sunday mornings.

School, the University of Fribourg has a bar adjacent to the reading room or reading room adjacent to the bar resembling at any hour of the day your idea of a European fashion show a myriad of clothes' styles cut in then under pulled through reversing back to where do they all come from?

The next cut seems to be an examination of death, the slow agony results in a daily game of Russian Roulette with the skull of mankind.

The Beatles were an immediate expression of these views but the idea seems much more dynamic and vitally alive than any previous album Revolver. It could be said that this is the first album in Rock music that actually succeeds in being a unified whole. Each song is a successful effort at portraying a single theme, disillusionment with the current epoch, and this loss of faith results in a double meaning in this song here or in the current epoch, and this loss of faith results in a double meaning in this instance. In this way one can develop something more than just nonsensical ideas to an entire world. This is trying to communicate its inner turmoil felt by the group existence in which neither life nor love amounts to anything. "I Want To Tell You" then explains the frustration one feels at being unable to communicate themselves to someone else in the sterility of the 20th Century. The revolvers are world problems and not mere personal problems or communications arc not just entertainment for the hordes of seething adolescents.

Side one opens with "Taxman", a song that readily displays the growing dissatisfaction they are feeling for the current political system. They are out of touch with a government that will exploit every possible situation to increase its power and its finances. And the "advice to those who die, beware the pennies on your eyes" is an indication that the system will not only be the death of us, but will survive us, if only as a symbol of death, the submarine that as a weapon of war and a symbol of death, the submarine becomes just another revolver. "She Said She Said" is the picture of a love affair involving a suspicious girl whose warped view of her relationship destroys herself and her lover.

On side two we are given one of the most dismal situations of all. "For No One" is a glimpse of the cavernous failure of contemporary marriage. It is another view of a Right-on existence in which neither life nor love amounts to anything. "I Want To Tell You" then explains the frustration one feels at being unable to communicate themselves to someone else in the sterility of the 20th Century. The revolvers are world problems and not mere personal problems or communications arc not just entertainment for the hordes of seething adolescents.

To the Beatles, alienation and lack of communication seem to be the most overwhelming problems of the 20th century. Into My Life". Here the singer screams his driving need to come into contact with anyone. There is no longer any time for hesitation, he has got to get someone into his life immediately. Finally the last song on the album carries the theme to another level. "And Tomorrow Never Knows? is the eerie prediction that possibly tomorrow will be the day that the hammer hits the bullet, for in this song we come to realize that alienation and lack of communication are not just problems of the individual but rather they are world problems that could result in the triggering of a nuclear holocaust and thus the destruction of mankind. The entire album as a result of this last cut takes on new dimensions, for it represents not just a portrayal of the shallowness of this era but is an effort to have us realize the problems so we can affect the solution. This solution would be the theme of the next cut on this album Spt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. That solution is, and has always been in one word, the word is love.
As my mind wandered from William Shakespeare's Hamlet, I became engrossed in investigating some lighter reading literature. The basketball season was also coming to an end and once again return to academic pursuits. Moving toward the library I began to muse on the Phillips Memorial library, visions of headlines drifted before my eyes, I began to mumble to myself, "I came out of retirement for my people" (Big Time Wrestling Magazine), or and Exposition, "Boston's fabulous duo" (Hockey News) or "A Grand Prix Review" Rowman & Littlefield Publishing.

To my surprise, the only periodical to be found was a torn, slightly tattered and slightly illustrated, that had obviously been well read. Searching high and low for a misplaced copy of Basketball Review, Hockey News, or Sports, I came up with zero copies of each. The card catalogue was also a negative asset, listing only S.I. and Ski News. After searching through the magazines, I came to the conclusion that the library was not the place for sports oriented magazines. My answer, money. Surly, if the library won't do, any expense is not wasted.

I figure that issue of "Ski News" won't return and that the "S.I." is on its last legs, so before the library is totally void of current sports literature something should be done. Interested fans should contact the coaching staff at the Phillips Memorial and suggest titles to be considered for future purchases.

Well, thats that. Hamlet calls and I must return until another period report, only the two previously mentioned.

Momently shaken, I later moved inquire to the reason for the apparent shortage of sports oriented magazines. My answer, money. Surdy, if the library won't do, any expense is not wasted.

The Providence College Hockey Friars ended a two game losing streak in dramatic fashion, achieving their 14th victory in 16 games, 77-67. The intensity of the intrastate rivalry was evident as both sides encountered lead changes and nine ties that occurred during the basketball game. Not until the final minute did the Friars pull ahead to a 3-2 point lead over the Rams.

Coach Gavitt called for them to go into a zone press after every basket they scored and when the Rams failed back into a 2-3 zone. When they failed to score, they went into a man-on-man.

For the Friars' part, their defensive strategy, according to Coach Gavitt, called for them to go into a zone press after every basket they scored and when the Rams failed back into a 2-3 zone. When they failed to score, they went into a man-on-man.

Coach Gavitt disclosed after the game that as a result of DiGregorio's injury, they wouldn't be able to fast break as much as usual. Therefore, the Friars' inordinate use of a zone press was designed to present them with fastbreaking opportunities.

Charlie Crawford, the Friars' sixth man, was forced to miss the game due to the serious illness of a sister. He has been at his home in Mt. Vernon, New York, since last Sunday (January 30).

A look at statistics: Marvin Barnes was pulled in to date, 276 rebounds for an average of better than 17 per game. He stands fourth nationally in that department. Marvin has also amassed 339 points in 16 outings for better than 21 ppg. Ernie DiGregorio is second in scoring, averaging a little better than 17 ppg. He also averages about 10 assists a contest... Don Lewis has taken over third place in scoring, averaging more than 15 per game. He is also the second best rebounds on the squad at 5.6. Again, his personal average of 2 in assists is excellent...
