PC Student Health Insurance: Higher Cost, Lower Benefits

By Frank Fortin

"It's about as good as we can get for the money."

That statement, made by Joseph Byron, vice president for business affairs, probably best sums up the College's position on the policy of PC Student Health Insurance.

Byron, whose office now administers the program, said of the policy, "You can get better plans, if you have the money."

But, he added, "Insurance. There was a bad accident several years ago where a student had a serious injury, and he didn't have a dime for insurance...My office was not officially involved at this point."

"It was a direct dealing between the student and the insurance company," said Byron.

"Last year," he stated, "the idea for student health insurance was introduced. Before this, all health insurance was handled by Father Duffy."

"After the search, the Health and Safety Committee reevaluated the program and decided to make the program optional at that time," he stated. Forbes granted permission for Father Duffy to continue the program as it was at that point.

PC Corporation Elects Three New Members

The Providence College Corporation elected three new members and re-elected two others at its last meeting held in June.

The newly elected members are the Rev. Mark Heath, O.P., Rev. Paul J.V. Walsh, O.P., former chaplain of the College, and Patricia Davis, the junior student representative.

The governing board of the Corporation presently numbers 37, not including three honorary members.

Meeting twice a year, the Corporation is responsible for electing the president of the College, controlling salaries, tenure, and promotion. They are also responsible for the care and development of the campus.

1988 Student Congress policy: "Sloppy"

The idea for student health insurance, say Byron and Father Francis Duffy, vice president for student relations, was first started around 1968, when representatives of the Student Congress requested that a form of health insurance be instituted.

Before this, all health insurance was the sole responsibility of the student.

Father Duffy said, "The College had no objection to this, but they were not prepared to run it themselves. Byron said, "Father Duffy worked with Student Congress. My office became involved several years in a purely advisory way, to give some assistance and help them...My office was not officially involved at this point."

"It was a direct dealing between the student and the insurance company," said Byron.

"Last year," he stated, "the president of the College, with the Committee on Administration, approved a policy change. They decided to make the program mandatory."

"No one within Dr. Trudeau's office was not officially involved at this point."

PC Student Health Insurance: Higher Cost, Lower Benefits

over to his office.

But, he said, due to the fact that an increase was narrower than expected, there is a chance there will soon be such a raise in the premium.

Father Duffy did not estimate what the new premium might be.

The Letter And The Waiver

The current process by which a student applies for health insurance includes the mailing of a letter from the Business Affairs Office of the College. The letter states in part:

"Coverage is for 24 hours a day, for 12 months, whether you are at home, at college, or travelling anywhere."

"The College requires all students to have insurance, and health accident insurance program. Participation may be waived upon presentation of written evidence of comparable coverage. Blue Cross or similar hospital insurance may or may not provide equivalent coverage."

"The benefits under this plan are paid in addition to benefits and medical services provided under any individual or group insurance."

On the reverse side of this letter is the waiver form. Each parent or guardian must indicate in hospital or medical services. Everybody just doesn’t respond, and we have to follow up and chase him."

Brown’s Policy

Richter, Byr, and Reid, Inc., of Providence College’s plan, his coverage expires when he reaches the age of 18. Many students neglect to take out a separate policy at that age.

Byron readily states that the College cannot force the uninsured student, under the present system, to take out the Health policy if he or she wishes to add to the existing plan and bring coverage equal to PC’s.

He said, "But we’re going to have to be chasing people. There’s a human element involved here. Somebody just doesn’t respond, and we have to follow up and chase him."

Brown’s Policy - Richter, Byr, and Reid, Inc.

PC is not the only area college to have some kind of health insurance policy for students. In fact, most colleges have some form available to both undergraduates and graduates. However, they are often different in several areas, including premiums, and status of availability.

University of Rhode Island’s policy is almost totally identical to Brown’s policy. The procedure of purchasing the plan is the same as Providence Insurance (mandatory with waiver option), and the cost is $21 per semester. Maximum benefits are $5,000 per accident and injury, and the policy ends all of the first $500 and 80 per cent of the remainder, subject to a $20 deductible fee.

URI also had dependency insurance. The plan is distributed by the same firm as PC’s. The policy’s effective date, and when the student has gone 180 consecutive days without medical treatment, is underwritten by the St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of St. Paul, Minnesota.

Rhode Island College’s Optional Plan

Rhode Island College’s insurance plan is almost totally optional. The cost to the student is $20, and the maximum benefits are $5,000 per accident and injury, and for obstetrical care, anesthesiologist, and for care of newborns. The maximum payment is $300, and the policy pays all of this amount.

The effective period of coverage at Brown is the same as Providence College, September 1 through August 31. There is, however, one waiver provision where the Dean’s Office may waive the premium. Brown’s plan is underwritten by the E.W. Shippee and Sons, of 56 Pine St., Providence.

URI: Same Underwriter, Different Policy

The University of Rhode Island’s plan is distributed by the same firm as PC’s policy. The procedure of purchasing the plan is the same as Providence Insurance (mandatory with waiver option), and the cost is $21 per semester. Maximum benefits are $5,000 per accident and injury, and the policy pays all of the first $500 and 80 per cent of the remainder, subject to a $20 deductible fee.

URI also had dependency insurance. The plan is distributed by the same firm as PC’s. The policy’s effective date, and when the student has gone 180 consecutive days without medical treatment, is underwritten by the St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of St. Paul, Minnesota.

Brown’s College’s Optional 41 Plan

Brown’s College’s insurance plan is, like RIC, totally voluntary. The cost to the student is $38 for the minimal protection plan. Maximum benefits are $750 for injury and $350 for illness. However, for an additional seven dollars, the student may purchase a major medical benefit option.

Benefits under this option are $5,000 for any accident or illness, with the insurance company paying 80 per cent of this total. There are no mental health insurance benefits under the major medical plan. The plan is 22 dollars deductible, and there is also an option of purchasing just the medical portion of the policy, for seven dollars. The plan is administered by the same company as PC’s policy.

"We Realize The Limitations"

Brown’s insurance is part of it's benefits, at 13 Brown Street in Providence. The Brown infirmary has a full-time 24-hour staff, and its services are considerably more extensive than the PC infirmary is equipped to give. Father Duffy speculated that the increased benefits under the Brown plan (and presumably URI’s plan as well) may be a result of the larger infirmaries.

According to Father Duffy, however, the benefits and premium which PC offers "is a judgement call in the sense that the cost of hospitalization is continually rising. We realize the limitation of our insurance, but people had other coverage say they like this one, which took care of the small stuff."

Byron would seem to concur with Father Duffy’s opinion. "I have discussed this matter with other people," he said, "and they are generally satisfied. It is as good a plan as we can get for the money."

Editor Says '75 Veritas Will Be 'One of Best'

By Edward D. Cinini

Although the yearbook staff faced a number of roadblocks this summer, its advent on campus is scheduled for early November, and according to Veritas editor Ana Cabrera, "it will be one of the best ever."

Work on the yearbook progressed very slowly in the early part of the summer, and, as a result, the original company's deadline of June 11, and the editor's own deadline of July 1 were both missed.

Even when it appeared that all the deadlines would be missed, Ana still committed herself to finishing the '75 edition before her wedding date of August 22. But juggling about taking the Veritas on her honeymoon no longer became a laughing matter for Ana when it was learned that literary editor Ann Frank had left for graduate school on August 17 before completing the class history.

Ann Frank did eventually finish the history in school at the University of Missouri, but it did not arrive in Providence until about 10 days ago, and, as a result, the 120-page senior section is just now being turned into the printer.

If the yearbook had been completed by July 1, it would have been the original company's deadline of July 1, it would have been completed by July 1, it would have been completed by July 1, it would have been completed by July 1.

Patricia Slevina, Ann's college literary editor, underwent open heart surgery in early June and was unable to contribute her talent because no layouts were available before her operation. Other members of the editorial board, Paul DeMeglio and Tony Piniasi, photo editors, and Steve Cirrola, business manager, completed the bulk of their work during the school year.

One person whom Ana described as "infinitely helpful" was Ellie Babbitt, a staff photographer who was promptly appointed assistant editor. Others who Ana cited were Edward Cinini and Frank Fortin for their assistance in laying out the senior section.

Ana also hailed Richard Fritz, director of the Slavin Center, Room 109, who served as the "real advisor" to the publication.

Despite the problems she faced this year, Ana claims that if she had to do it all over again, she would choose the same people for her board.

Traditionally, the Veritas staffs have not really begun work, with the exception of photography, until after Commencement Day. Last year's Edition was completed on July 2.

Students wishing to purchase a copy of the '75 edition should place their orders now at the Veritas office. Last year, all available copies were sold within two days. Graduates' copies will be mailed to their home addresses. The price of the book is $10, the same as last year.

New Chaplain Seeks Ideas, Praises PC Community

By Peggy Martin

Beginning any new position is difficult, but not for Rev. Terrence Keegan, O.P., newly appointed chaplain of Providence College. His start is a filled with potential and promise.

A 1960 graduate of PC, Father Keegan returns to the campus with "a very positive attitude towards the situation here." He noted many similarities between his days spent as a math major and the college today.

"Life seems to be very easy, going and happy-go-lucky like the '50s, but there is also a lot more individualism," Father Keegan remarked.

Although Father Keegan has never been a College chaplain before, he does have many qualities and experiences behind him that deem him capable for the job. After his ordination in 1968, Father Keegan completed work on his St. L. and St. Lr. degrees. Following that work he taught at the seminary in Dover, studied Scripture and Biblical Theology in Rome and Palestine for three years, and before coming to PC, he was a professor at the Dominican House of Studies in Washington, D.C.

Besides his many academic merits, Father Keegan possesses a common sense, a kind, gentle nature, and a strong belief in his work. Those qualities are evident in his decision not to make any immediate changes or plans in the Chaplain's Office. He decided to "feel my way out for a while and trust in established policies because I have no background for making changes."

However, Father Keegan stressed that he wanted "a lot of input" seeing his new position from all levels of the Providence College community. He hopes to contact administrators, faculty, clergy and students when formulating new policies for the office.

Father Keegan has also instituted an "open door policy" for his office which will practically guarantee that either Father Keegan or one of the assistant chaplains will be there at all times during the day to answer the needs of the college community.

The main goal of the Chaplain and his office, says Fr. Keegan, "is to make Jesus Christ present on this campus wherever I am present." This will be accomplished by listening, responding, and praying.

Father seeks suggestions, time, and ideas from the students. He is here to help them in any way he can.

Father Quigley To Work With Chicago's Chicanos

Father James Quigley, former chaplain, is now working with Spanish-speaking Mexican-Americans in Chicago, where it was learned last week.

Father Quigley originally planned to work with Cuban refugees in Atlanta, but the diocese there was lacking the funds necessary to accommodate him.

The former chaplain spent this past summer in Chicago, training for the type of position he was subsequently given. He points out that his duties are at the drop out rate among the students in his area is about 79 per cent.

Students and other members of the community interested in contacting Father Quigley may write in care of Dominican Fathers and Brothers, 1900 South Ashland Ave., Chicago, Illinois 60608.

PA New Mini-Major

With national, state, and local governments continually expanding their services to the public, the demand for qualified people to work for the various government agencies has grown greatly.

In order to help satisfy that demand, Providence College has developed a public administration program.

The PA program is not a major. It consists, rather, of a series of courses which may be taken as electives along with the student's major requirements.

Requirements for the program consist of seven core courses plus two electives. The core courses constitute an introduction to the study of law, science, economics, and business.

Electives must be taken in an area outside of the student's major, but may be chosen from a number of other acceptable programs.

When a participant in the program graduates, special mention is made on his transcript that the student has completed this "mini major" in addition to the requirements of his major.

Students who have already indicated an interest in the PA program should contact either Kevin Kelley of the economics department or William S. Seals to the political science department.
Autumn is upon us, but the College’s yearbook, the Veritas, is not. Its arrival on campus is now set for early November. The ‘75 Veritas staff’s lack of foresight will probably not meet the highest possible standards which that particular staff is capable of attaining. This editorial board, however, is not in the position to judge the quality of the ‘75 Veritas per se. Such statements must be reserved until the release of the actual product.

Dear Editor:
A cartoon in your June 23rd special issue describing the Classes of 1977 and 1978 as being overly prone to proms prompts comment.
Personally, I feel that your description of the aforementioned classes (one of which I am a member) is incorrect, and analytically in error. Did it ever occur to your staff that perhaps Providence College's student body realizes that no matter how much they are disliked, the Providence College student union fees will be raised in order to support such frivolities as club memberships, and despite their support of Dr. Robert J. Lewis, S.J., Ph.D., an outstanding instructor whose tenure?

Thirdly, that tuition fees at Providence College will continue to skyrocket when such increases may perhaps be avoided if on-campus residents and neighborhood vandals were prevented from defacing and literally destroying campus property. Last, but not least, The Cowl has been guilty of giving two page coverage to sporting events, while neglecting city, state, and national newsworthy events entirely. So, before you judge Providence College's student body too harshly, I suggest that you first shape up your own staff.

Keep the faith baby.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: In regard to your suggestion, it is important to realize that The Cowl's staff and budget are limited, and, as a result, we are forced to report campus affairs primarily and key local and national affairs which affect the College secondarily. In order to grasp city, state, and national newsworthy events, it might be a good idea to subscribe to The Providence Journal or The New York Times. Both are being sold on campus.)

By Barbara May

At this time of the year, everyone talks about beginnings. Your parents (if you are a freshman) have probably already given you the pep talk about the Dean's List, that great beginning on the road to medical school, or some equally terrifying expectation. If you are like so many of us, with battle scars of the "getting to know you" syndrome, then you, too, are a candidate for the "new beginnings" club.

Novely does not have to mean that what was true before no longer holds. It just means that there is fresh blood to pump into the system which has developed over the years.

There are a few things that I would like to say about my column this year.

Firstly, the reason that it is called Speak Out is precisely because I want it to be a completely honest attempt to look at events and people on campus. (This is contrary to some opinions that I am simply outspoken, which may or may not be the case.)

Secondly, a word about events. This column is primarily a women's column featuring events and interviews concerning women on campus. This does not, however, exclude the possibility of bringing in a series of articles on male consciousness-raising or similar articles.

Thirdly, and perhaps most important, I would like to say something about categories. People have a great tendency to lump other people into stereotypes, sometimes with little or no provocation. In some cases, I suppose, the stereotypes apply. From my own experiences, I have been astonished at the images people have held without ever having met me. Usually, after getting to know me, they are shocked to see those images fade apart.

The point? Perhaps we should jump people into neat little packets, we would be wise to consider them fully. What does mean to be truly "liberated" as a person? Liberation has nothing to do with burning bras or getting that "token woman" in the mechanics shop. Liberation means becoming aware of your own potential and drawbacks as being yourself. This is the image that this column seeks to portray. Hope it accomplishes that end.

As always, feedback is welcome at all times. I hope that all new beginnings turn into fruitful and next column. Where we go from here?

Errors

Students who should have received Dean's List recognition were not so notified and should contact the Cowl office. Friday, September 12. A list of additional students will be run next week's edition.

Letters Policy

Edward Ciminii announced today the policy with regard to the Letters to the Editor section of The Cowl. The policy is being published in order to lessen any confusion readers may have concerning the publication of letters. It is now in effect and will continue to until Cicinni's retirement.

A specifically designated space is assigned to each issue for the letters' section. It is necessary to limit the number of letters published each week in order to provide space for regularly assigned staff features and commentaries and to maintain a well-balanced feedback of a variety of opinions. Authors should attempt to limit the length of their letters. Letters of over 300 words will probably not be published unless the author grants the newspaper permission to edit his letter.

All letters published are in no way altered or edited with regard to content. If necessary, grammatical or spelling corrections, for example, may be made. All letters (original copies) are kept on file by the editor-in-chief for a period of six months and may be published in any issue during that time span (as long as the theme of the letter has not lost its impact). The letters are not open to public inspection.

All letters must comply with the following standards: neatly printed, legibly written, or preferably typed double spaced; fixed to the editor-in-chief's desk or mailed to P. O. Box 2981. Providence, R.I. 02901.

Lastly, all letters must be signed. Names of letter-writers may be held upon request if it appears that the writer's well-being at PC may somehow be hampered.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: In regard to your suggestion, it is important to realize that The Cowl's staff and budget are limited, and, as a result, we are forced to report campus affairs primarily and key local and national affairs which affect the College secondarily. In order to grasp city, state, and national newsworthy events, it might be a good idea to subscribe to The Providence Journal or The New York Times. Both are being sold on campus.)

By Barbara May

At this time of the year, everyone talks about beginnings. Your parents (if you are a freshman) have probably already given you the pep talk about the Dean's List, that great beginning on the road to medical school, or some equally terrifying expectation. If you are like so many of us, with battle scars of the "getting to know you" syndrome, then you, too, are a candidate for the "new beginnings" club.

Novely does not have to mean that what was true before no longer holds. It just means that there is fresh blood to pump into the system which has developed over the years.

There are a few things that I would like to say about my column this year.

Firstly, the reason that it is called Speak Out is precisely because I want it to be a completely honest attempt to look at events and people on campus. (This is contrary to some opinions that I am simply outspoken, which may or may not be the case.)

Secondly, a word about events. This column is primarily a women's column featuring events and interviews concerning women on campus. This does not, however, exclude the possibility of bringing in a series of articles on male consciousness-raising or similar articles.

Thirdly, and perhaps most important, I would like to say something about categories. People have a great tendency to lump other people into stereotypes, sometimes with little or no provocation. In some cases, I suppose, the stereotypes apply. From my own experiences, I have been astonished at the images people have held without ever having met me. Usually, after getting to know me, they are shocked to see those images fade apart.

The point? Perhaps we should jump people into neat little packets, we would be wise to consider them fully. What does mean to be truly "liberated" as a person? Liberation has nothing to do with burning bras or getting that "token woman" in the mechanics shop. Liberation means becoming aware of your own potentials and drawbacks as being yourself. This is the image that this column seeks to portray. Hope it accomplishes that end.

As always, feedback is welcome at all times. I hope that all new beginnings turn into fruitful and next column. Where we go from here?

BOG Offers Variety
In New Film Season

By Suzanne Fournier

What’s new at the movies? The schedule of Box Office Groupers (BOG) films for the fall semester holds a wide variety of interesting answers to this familiar question. Many of the best movies of the past few years will light the screen once again in the Albertus Magnus Auditorium.

One strong example of the best in recent films will start the season tonight as strains of “The Entertainer” fill the auditorium. The Sting (1973) reunites Paul Newman, Robert Redford and director George Roy Hill (1969’s Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid) in their comic best. The Newman-Redford team portray a pair of shrewd but lovable con men who will have the audience guessing until, quite literally, the final moments.

The comedy Animal Crackers (1930) may very well be another immortal film. The saxy genius of the Marx Brothers entertains year after year in this vehicle, their second movie, it’s well-stocked with their usual blend of mix-ups and mayhem. A different wit lies in stores for the viewer of Reefer Madness today. This older film’s treatment of a subject taboo in the 1920s became vintage humor for the 1970s.

The story of the 70s enjoys more than comedy, however, and the BOG schedule accordingly suits a wider assortment of tastes. Suspense is high on the list and Roman Polanski’s excellent Chinatown (1974) stands out as one of the finest of its genre in recent years. Jack Nicholson and Faye Dunaway’s tremendous acting draws viewers into this taut tale of corruption and crime in the Los Angeles of the 1940s.

The Oddessa Fills (1974) features Jon Voight as a young journalist seeking justice in postwar Germany, a very different time and place. His earlier adventures in Deliverance (1972) were in sharp contrast to the risky, undercover work characterizing much of Oddessa. The rapids of Georgia generate high tension throughout the movie, leaving scenes and thoughts hotly discussed long after the film ends.

Bob Melon’s squeaking Oscar-winning performance as a disillusioned manufacturer trying to save not the tiger, but his work — and his very spirit from extinction. In California Split, director Robert Altman (1970’s M.A.S.H., 1973’s Nashville) studies devastation of a different sort through the tale that fistic boxing takes upon the lives of Elliot Gould and George Segal’s characters. Neither film is to be missed for the sheer artistry of acting and direction which both display.

Another recent success is The Longest Yard (1974), the prison drama featuring the famous football finale, pitting guards against inmates in a furious contest. Burt Reynolds and Eddie Arnold carry the story line ably, scoring high in audience reaction to the unfolding conflict. Viewers’ response to a different evening’s fare may well be nostalgic: this fall’s schedule includes a set of films from the 1940s and 1950s, featuring Marlon Brando, James Cagney, Gene Kelly and Angela Lansbury.

The smoke chimneys are saved the problem of repairs when they encase the brickwork in a concrete liner, Lajoie said. The problem of repairs when they consider added as an extra inducement toward a steady habit of moving through the campus. The winner of the BOG schedules accordingly includes an extra highlight for the fall semester all semester. Beer again included as an extra inducement toward a steady habit of moving through the campus.

Jazz Is Alive And Well In Newport

By Kevin M. Howard

In this year of bicentennial tributes and celebrations, Americans have begun to take pride in their traditions. One such, though not nearly as long-lived in this country, yet uniquely important in its own right, is the Newport Jazz Festival.

Newport's tribute to this vibrant mode of music is an annual statement of where jazz came from, where it is, and where it is going. This year's festival was no exception. Mother Nature did not bless this festival with suitable weather conditions: most of it was intermittent showers and a cold relentless wind blowing from the seas over the wall of Fort. Adams, the festival's site. Set-up times were annoyingly long and the crowd, for the most part, was restive.

One hour later than the scheduled starting time, the audience was offered the Second Generation of Brubeck (drums) and Darius (electric piano) for a truly Ahmad Jamal. The set consisted of some of the newer and more progressive jazz, on a Chick Corea idea; however, the master himself, was evident. There was a newer and more progressive jazz, in the tradition of one such, Chick Corea. His arrangements are innovative and improvisational. He, too, has progressed with the passage of time.

One of the most unique and incredible aspects of jazz is its timeless, ageless quality. These qualities are epitomized in one man - Herbie Mann. Throughout his involvement in jazz, Herbie Mann has never stayed in one place. He was there at the beginning and contributed his fine vocal efforts, but only as a member of a jazz band - and he was limited and appeared.

Miles Davis was the first show, accompanied by a guitar player who Miles stopped at times to listen to - he played his long deep sultry brand of jazz that has set him in the elite of trumpet players.

There had been considerable controversy over Blood, Sweat and Tears performing. The question was whether they were rock or jazz. Obviously aware of this fact, they made it very clear where their loyalties lay. Spicing well-arranged original material with some old standards, they were finally accepted by the audience of skeptics. David Clayton Thomas contributed his fine vocal efforts, but only as a member of a jazz band - and he was limited and appeared.

He was there at the beginning and contributed his fine vocal efforts, but only as a member of a jazz band - and he was limited and appeared. Now the question is "Who is Stan Getz?" Getz has been around a long time. He has played his saxophone with the best (Dizzy Gillespie and Gerry Mulligan to name a few). Getz has been relatively dormant until this year, when he released a new album called Caprice. This new LP featured songs for the most part written by Chick Corea (who also plays electric piano on the album); Getz laughingly pushed the album, playing most of his songs from it. He is smooth and soothing, which makes his appeal great. Again, balance was the key as his stand-up bass player was probably the best there is.

Go on now - from soothing to moving with Maynard Feurgeson. Mr. Feurgeson too has been around a long time. He is a master of many band jazz, enriched by the electronic arrangements of Herbie Hancock's album. He is smooth and soothing, which makes his appeal great. Again, balance was the key as his stand-up bass player was probably the best there is.

Brubeck is a monument of jazz, appearing realized the significance of "Take Five," the song which is synonymous with the name Brubeck.

In Newport, each musician appeared realized the significance of the Jazz Festival. Therefore, it came as no surprise that the ac-

However, Dr. Trudeau's method of teaching and his observation of the new faculty rules and regulations as specified in the Faculty Manual were not debated, with various members of the college community presenting evidence he based his decisions and against the former UMass undergraduate.

According to Dr. Thomson, Dr. Trudeau's lack of academic strictness came under fire from certain fronts. The vice president of the college community presented evidence he based his decisions and against the former UMass undergraduate.

Trudeau Decision Close

This last June, the Corporation issued an amendment to the Faculty Manual which specifies criteria for tenure. As a result when Dr. Trudeau's case is judged in three years, it will be reviewed according to more stringent criteria, Dr. Thomson noted.

Patricia Davis, a religious studies major from Providence College;; N.J., is the third student in the history of the College to be named as the junior student representative.

Davis will serve her first year as an advisor with voice but no voting privileges. With the approval of the Student Senate, the Corporation, and the College, she will serve her second year as the semi-representative.

Barbara Jackson is this year's senior representative, who has both voice and voting privileges. In an election earlier this year the current voting turnout, Davis topped two other sophomores last M. with 261 points. Now Mrs. Davis and her opponent both received less than 900 points. Voters were asked to assign three points to their second place, two points to their second, and one point to their last. Student Corporation election however, are used to gauge student opinion, and winning an election does not necessarily mean that a student will be chosen.

A rematch was never negotiated. After the first match, Silvestri said that he would never double up with Ciminii again.

Optimistic Boosters On the Road Back

By Jim Travers

"One of our big problems has always been a lack of depth," Coach Bill Doyle admits, "but we are fortunate to have some quality freshmen coming in this season and I am optimistic about our chances of having the best overall depth of any team I’ve had at PC.

This statement fairly well sums up the soccer situation on campus this season.

The Friar boosters suffered through one of their worst campaigns ever last year with a 0-7-1 record. The fact that Emilio Masnada and Mike Sullifante have been lost through graduation, a strong nucleus of veterans remains. The squad will be led this year by tri-captains Pelino Ferrone, Mark Cohn and Kevin Mullins. Along with returnees Wally Fegel, Pat Farrell, Greg Papaz and Rick Bianco there should be enough experience to carry the squad over the hurdles encountered last year.

Besides a lack of depth, the Friars have always been plagued by a weak offensive attack. In several games last year, particularly the Connecticut and Barrington losses, the defense held but the Friars were somewhat anemic. With virtually the same people returning on defense, Coach Doyle will definitely be looking for more from the offense.

Last season could be looked at from the perspective that the team was rebuilding, but the problem may lie deeper than that. Soccer frequently pays the price of inexperience early on. Working with a limited budget and a close squad, the team quickly moved up to its present varsity status, and with better recruiting and teamwork, the squad will certainly emerge as one of the better programs in the East. Despite that fact, though, that may have been an adolescent age, and any success or failure must be taken in that vein. As everyone knows miracles don’t happen overnight, and the program is still very young.

Optimism is still quite high, however, that the team will return to the heights of last season, if not better. When it was 11-2. This year might prove that optimism, but certainly a step in the right direction.

The season kicks off on Sep tember 30 at Merrimack, and the first home contest will be Sep tember 28 against Stetson at Slavin Field in the Coed Division championship. The time is 2:30 at Hendricken Field.
