Wilmot's Battle Ends
Liberian Student Succumbs to Fatal Disease

Sunday evening, October 12, Wilmot Glay's struggle against severe aplastic anemia ended. It was a tragic end to a life that was accustomed to fighting against the odds.

Coming from the rain forest of Liberia at age 11, Wilmot, with the assistance of Peace Corps volunteers, was able to get a Martin Luther King scholarship and attend Providence College.

While at PC, Wilmot played fullback for the soccer team. It was during practice that the agile young man noticed that he was falling behind in sprints. On October 2, he checked into the PC infirmary, Dr. Richard L. Tesla had him hospitalized and specialists were called in.

After the disease had been diagnosed, doctors realized that Wilmot's greatest hope was a bone marrow transplant from one of his siblings. But time and money seemed to be enormous obstacles blocking this objective.

But Providence College set up a Wilmot Glay Fund, and supplied the necessary money for Wilmot's brother and sisters to travel from Liberia. And because of the extraordinary students, still waging the battle, doctors diagnosed, doctors realized that Wilmot's greatest hope was a bone marrow transplant from one of his siblings.

Students' Scuffle
Results in Arrests

By Frank Fortin

Two Providence College students involved in a scuffle with security guards during the Columbus Day weekend were arraigned in Sixth District Court in Providence last week in charges of receiving stolen goods and possession of a loaded gun in a motor vehicle.

Sophomore John C. Merry, 19, and Douglas H. Toomey, 20, were arrested after being detained by two student security guards and two Watts security guards at about 1:30 a.m. on Monday, October 12.

According to sophomore Dave Sprague, one of the student security guards and an eyewitness, the two suspects were detained until Providence police could arrive on campus, on the suspicion that they had stolen the car they were driving.

Sprague said that he and two other student security guards, Chris Bishop and Phil Franklin, investigated some "rattling" behind the Thomas House, near Raymond Hall. He said the suspects tried to drive the vehicle, with one flat tire, down the Raymond Hall back drive, then made a right turn and apparently attempted to enter Raymond Circle, at the front of the building.

According to one witness, the PC guards caught up with the driver and his passenger while the two were attempting to unlock the car. See STUDENTS, P. 1.

Minority Admissions
Has Blacks Questioning Policies

By David Sprague

The number of black students admitted in PC's large freshman class this year has caused the College's black community to question the College's efforts to attract and admitting the minority student.

Clara McKnight, '76, president of the Afro-American Society, shares the opinion of other black students that little has been done by the College to bridge the gap that alienates the blacks from the white population.

McKnight feels that to reduce alienation, the College must make an effort to enroll more blacks. Earlier this fall, Michael G. Backes, director of admissions, approached the Afro-American Society after recognizing PC's low minority enrollment. Since that time, he has worked with the Afro-Americans with hopes of building a program for recruitment of minorities.

Both the administration and the black students agree that the first step is the decision to support the administration's proposed move to this year's commencement to the Providence Civic Center.

Lack of Space May Move
Commencement to Civic Center

The Class of 1976 commencement committee announced today that it has endorsed a plan proposed by the administration to move the site of commencement exercises from the Grotto to the Providence Civic Center.

The administration submitted two proposals for consideration by the committee. The committee was instructed to choose one of the two. The first plan called for commencement to be held on campus in the Grotto as usual, but there would be no commencement exercises in case of inclement weather. The second plan proposed that the ceremony be moved to the Civic Center rain or shine.

The commencement committee endorsed the second proposal on the grounds that it insured that there would be a ceremony.

Under the first plan, the administration refused to allow the use of Alumni Hall in case of inclement weather. Reasons cited were lack of adequate space (two tickets per student), and organizational chaos.

A practically unlimited supply of tickets was cited as a reason for moving the ceremony. Also cited was the fact that the Civic Center would provide comfortable viewing for everyone and its air-conditioned hall would allow the committee to expand and improve the ceremony itself.

Class dances were also discussed. A planned flea market and craft show that was to be held Saturday, October 19, was postponed to Monday, October 27, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Chase parking lot. Beer and hot dogs will be served.

Neighbors Gripe; Damage Persists

By Molly Hennessey

The annual problem of student vandalism in the neighborhood of Providence College has left College administrators and neighbors disagreeing on its seriousness.

Last year a meeting was held with representatives from the administration, the student body, and residents of Annie Street to discuss ways of decreasing acts of vandalism in the neighborhood. Since that time, the situation is not worse this year.

But according to Raymond Kret, director of security, the situation is not worse this year. "I've received no more than two calls this year from neighbors with complaints. "In general, there appears to be an appreciative decrease in the area of vandalism or vandalism reports. This makes me very happy because it means that much less money the College has to spend on rectifying damages.

See BACKES, P. 2
Among selective colleges and of intense scholarship competition academic performance." Of College Boards, most emphasis ethnic origin, must meet the students enrolled at Providence provide maximum institutional minority group students is to universities. Furthermore, the prevailing philosophy for funding minority group students is to support in the form of scholarship grants while minimizing the potential for disrupting or helping assistance through loans and work-study.

"The financial resources of the College's Martin Luther King Scholarship Program are in peril and inadequate," he said, "to compete qualitatively or quantitatively with minority groups."

1. Backes stated, "Qualified minority is placed on a minority student's acceptance, academically, through the Admissions Office. "After admission," he stressed, "all minority students may apply for a MLK scholarship."

2. Potential black students will be invited to the campus in a program hosted by the Afro-American Society. While there, the potential students will receive room, board, and attend classes.

3. The College's bulletin will be modified to give a better presentation of black enrollment. McKnight stated, "The last photos of blacks were taken five years ago. One is a photo of a student who is now in his fourth year of medical school. The other was a professor who is in the time just graduated."

4. McKnight further indicated that the Afro-American Society had not been approached with regard to the film the College is producing about life at PC to be used by the Admissions Office. The Admissions Office will employ several others ways in attracting minority students.

Clara McKnight (left) and Michael Backes, president of the Afro-Am Club, and director of admissions.

All students who attend PC are eligible for financial aid and scholarships provided by the College. What PC is presently doing is "tying a package" of available aid and scholarships programs for those minority students who are eligible.

Thomas and McKnight agree that the courses offered here are adequate to fill the needs of blacks. McKnight greatly approves of PC's educational opportunities. However, both agree that life on campus needs to include black culture through BOG and other cultural centers of activity.

While McKnight does not personally doubt Backes' sincerity in his efforts to increase black enrollment, she doesn't feel that anything tangible has been accomplished at this time.

She also added, "While black females are in high demand on the job market there are presently none in an administrative or teaching capacity at PC."

Backes feels the problem of attracting more blacks requires a full-time administrative and financial commitment. He added, "The Afro-American Society's skepticism indicates sincerity. Still, nothing will be accomplished with negativity from any parties concerned."

First Woman Class President Sees Frosh More Involved

By Celia Kettle and Karen Torret

Sue Cancro, the newly elected freshman class president, is the first woman president in the co-ed history of Providence College.

Cancro graduated from St. Edmund High School in Brooklyn, N.Y. She was very active in various clubs and served as a representative on the Student Council for three years. Her interests include music and she enjoys bike riding. Cancro is a participant in the Arts Honor Program, and has hopes of entering the field of law. Sue is also a big sister and she teaches reading to deaf children.

Sue describes herself as "open-minded" and says that her goal is to "help people."

During the elections, Cancro expressed a wish that "more had voted." She feels that as a woman she can bring a different viewpoint to the presidency, but that the general impact is in its novelty.

According to Sue, the freshman class exhibits a "different mood: more willingness to get involved." She would also like to try different methods for fund raising, other than traditional mixers.

"The role of the vice president is to assist the president in whatever way she can, and at the same time help others herself through Student Congress," said Rose Hernandez, freshman biology major, who is the vice president of the Class of 1979.

Rose's background, as student government president, includes her serving as representative of her class at Neptune High School in Neptune, N.J. The role of a major officer is somewhat new to her, but she is ready and willing to learn.

"By running for office I wanted to take an active part in college life, and meet as many new people as possible. Through my office I hope I can help freshmen students with whatever problems or questions they may have concerning student congress at PC," she said.

Juniors are showing an unprecedented interest in Ring Weekend this year. The affair has already sold out for the first time in recent memory. Bids, which were to go on sale for two weeks, were sold out in one. As a result, many juniors have not been able to buy bids.

Kathy Liebfreid, vice-chairperson of the Ring Weekend committee, said that a questionnaire, which was sent to "the juniors' interest" was sent out last year. Only 15 of the questionnaire were returned. The committee therefore rented only two rooms at the Chateau-de-Ville.

The interest had been shown last year, Liebfreid stated, another room could have been rented. It is now too late to obtain another room, but eight tables have been added to the areas already rented. It would be impossible to add more tables, she said.

Juniors who have not been able to buy bids have two opportunities left to do so. If any current bid-holders decide not to go, juniors whose names are on the waiting list will have first chance to buy them. Also, bids which have not been paid for by October 22 will go on sale October 27. Bids may be purchased at the Information Desk in Slavin Center.

PC's Neighbors

One resident of Annie Street, however, says that he is "afraid to get out of bed" on a Saturday morning and see what vandalism occurred on Friday night. The acts of vandalism include trampled gardens, broken windows and light fixtures and firecrackers in mail boxes.

On October 3, said another resident, the brake on a maintenance department truck in Alumni Hall parking lot was released, causing the truck to roll through the gate separating College property from Annie Street, tearing down the gate and landing on a neighbor's lawn within a foot of the house.

Although there is no property damage, the owner of the house said she would like to move. "This is the second time in one week," she said, "we just don't know what happened."

Several residents of Annie Street feel the administration has been insensitive to their complaints. Said one woman, "we feel as though there has been no help whatsoever."

Father Joseph Lennon, P. S. V. vice-president for community affairs, said, "The College has tried to be sensitive to our neighbors...though there's bound to be a little natural antagonism between town and gown."

Residents of Annie Street would like to see a guard posted at the gate on Annie Street from 11:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. One neighbor stated that after last year's meeting, two student guards were placed at the gate, but this lasted only for a few weeks.

However, Kret said that, last year, "the night supervisor of security protected the Annie Street gate during critical hours of the night...and if conditions warrant, a guard will be posted at the gate this year."

Father Lennon believes that a guard at the Annie Street gate is "as effective as a program to sensitize students to the feelings of the neighbors. Although I don't know how it could be done, the idea of one or two other student groups should look into this. There is no perfect solution to the problem of vandalism, but students should realize that when they vandalize, they are only cutting off their nose to spite their face."
Two Sides to Every Story

By Barbara Mays

Sandwiched somewhere between the announcement of Big Zia Hi and How to Conduct a Seance in the last issue of The Cowl, was the Lettings Interface. I am referring to Letters to The Editor. I read this section every few weeks for a chance to say something about it. Two weeks ago, however, something big enough to go by some of the things that were said to such a pitch, in fact, that as I sit here I feel almost obligated to say something about it.

Generally, when complaints are addressed, I look for constructive alternatives from the complainant. I found none two weeks ago. In this column I would like to give some of my own alternatives.

In his letter, "PC Rapes Campus," Mr. McGillirey states, "Moreover, in a time of rising oil cost, a time when individual auto use should be discouraged, and other means of transportation encouraged, the College has shown a lack of parking lot, further destroying available space. An additional referred to as "Chapin Woods." (In reference to the new parking lot.)

It seems to me that Providence College and The Cowl have a sight problem here. Mr. McGillirey doesn't state whether he was a resident or commuter when he attended PC—something that would definitely have made a difference in his perception of the parking problems. He would do well to search his memory for a time, to go back to his freshman year when he may have had to go all the way to Locklair to secure a parking lot in the middle of a shoestring and to get to class, Mr. McGillirey and others who oppose the parking lot have not found a better way of off-campus people to park in their cars so reasonably.

Furthermore, by bringing in tax exemptions and donations from the government to the College to pay with city money, it seems to me that Mr. McGillirey is not so much trying to point out a "Christian attitude" as one of "one hand washes the other".

I think that the entire affair has been greatly overemphasized. The parking lot conjures up past memories of "The Rape of the Locker." Maybe it would be a good idea to try a little reasonable.

I have been in the bartending business for 30 years, and I have much respect for my profession. I have met many people of pigs like the ones who visited the Rat on Saturday night, October 11. They were members of the Football Club, and to be had the dirtiest, most revolting type of entertainment possible. I wish that some of their parents would have been there with them. Virginia were there that night and I was ashamed. Even male students left the Rat because they could not stand the vulgarity.

I don't mind noise as long as it is part of good, clean fun, but that Chug-a-lug song which they were singing will never be sung again in the Rat.

Neuchatel, Switzerland — Any knowledgeable traveler knows that even when you ask the question correctly, you still are not assured of getting the proper answer.

Question: On to where? (Where do you get the wine?)

Answer: From the grapes.

Such was the case when the above question was posed by an overeager debater to the Neuchatel Wine Festival, on Saturday, October 4. The question, however, was intended to point the location where wine would be available for consumption in the medieval university town famous for its vineyards.

Neuchatel, located on the shores of Switzerland's largest wholly wooded lake, is more than its fair share of grapes. This year marked the fifteenth time it has held the annual Fete des Vendanges (Feast of the Grape Harvest). Neuchatel seems to be the appropriate town to host such a festival for two reasons. Firstly, it has the grapes. Secondly, the inhabitants of Neuchatel come across to the audience in a most authentic manner when posing the question of how and why wine is made.

If Cathedral of Ice is not theatre of the absurd, then it is certainly absurd theatre.

representative position because 'I want to help the class.' She views her task as pulling the class and the school together.

Steven Rossi is a political science major from Cumberland. Steve feels that his role as a representative is to take suggestions from the freshmen class and to represent them at Student Congress meetings. He feels that, if necessary, it is the representative's job to argue over points for the betterment of the freshmen class.

"The reason I ran for representative is that if you want to change things, you have to get out and do it yourself. It is important for the individual to initiate action."

Ellen Barnes, a social work major from Danvers, feels that the freshmen students chose the representatives "to bring their ideas to the attention of Student Congress." She sees herself as a liaison between the two bodies.

Father John Peterson is a theology major from Providence. As avid interest in politics led her to run for representative of the Class of 1979.

"I feel that the position of a political science major is the position of a leader. It is the responsibility of that position to represent the students fairly, and make them aware of what is going on in their school."

Martins was asked to pull together the freshman officers and representatives encourage the freshmen class to approach them with any questions or problems. The representatives, she feels, are the students and will help if they receive help by explaining what grapes they have.

Dan Collin is a business major from Walpole, Massachusetts. Collin believes that his main function is to help the freshman class organize itself. He is expected to pull together the freshmen students who have just left high school and enjoy the transition into college. A new leader was needed "to carry on the work" of the previous seniors. Collin's work was split into five main areas: the class parties, the budget, the organization of campus events, and the overall condition of the office. The treasurer also said that he is not at all satisfied with the present condition of the office. He feels that the class needs "at least two-thirds more work done."

The treasurer also said that he is not at all satisfied with the present condition of the office. Father John Petersen wanted the class to make an "in-depth, long-term, full-time" investigation of the condition of the office, because a number of important people visit the office, including "Governor Noel, important businessmen and bankers," who want a "palatial" office: "just a professional looking office that fits the title, treasurer of a college."

A CAREER Day will be sponsored by the Providence College Alumni Office, during which representatives from many major occupational fields will be present. The event will be held on November 6, from 1 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. in '44 Hall, Slavin Center.

According to Joseph Brum, director of the Alumni Affairs Office, about 75 alumni are expected to participate. Representatives from insurance and public financing, sales and marketing, law, business, journalism and publishing, social science, and data processing and computer systems will be among those fields at the affair.

A flea market and craft show will be sponsored by the Class of '69 this Monday on the parking lot adjacent to Dore Hall, on the Chelapa property. The event will be held from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Hot dogs and beer will be served.

Auditions for the Friars Cell next production, Tennessee Williams' The Night of the Iguana, will be held on Wednesday, October 22, and Thursday, October 23 at 7:30 p.m. in the Friars' Cell in the bottom of Stephen Hall. Energy Comm. Ponders Conservation Measures

By Pat Tiersan

The two-year-old Energy Conservation Committee of Providence College discussed various ways to reduce the consumption of energy at its first meeting of the semester.

Chairled by Arlene Jacquette, the committee, at its first meeting of the year on November 15, discussed problems including the Alumni Hall steam room, resident awareness, and lighted classrooms.

The committee decided that schedules of the last class in each room would be posted on the third floor of Harris Hall that where the Friars Club for the rest of the semester. This will be a guide to determine if this method will facilitate the "Lights Off" policy, thus conserving energy.

According to Weisberger, Rhode Island has many people who want to go to law school but do not - because admission to law school out of state is too expensive. Some law schools have cut back on the number of Rhode Islanders that they will accept.

Weisberger cited Harvard University, his alma mater, as an example of this phenomenon. There were ten Rhode Islanders in Judge Weisberger's graduating class. Harvard now limits Rhode Island admissions to four students per class.

PC was to establish a law school, would the College be able to raise enough money to finance it? Riley estimated that anywhere from as much as $2.5 million would be needed to get the law school going. This money would be used to build a library, hire faculty, and to make structural changes, such as creating bigger classrooms and more offices.

In a phone interview, Riley stated, "I would think of the Friars Club as a particular source of funds (undergraduate tuitions and fees)...As to exactly how much, I don't think this is a question I could answer frankly, I wouldn't have the slightest idea."

When asked if he felt that a law school in the private sector would give any advantages over a law school in the public sector, Riley responded, "I would have to say that I do believe that Rhode Island private schools would have an advantage over public schools.

Congress Approves
Wilmonth Glay Fund
By Mark Ackerman
The Student Congress, meeting for the fourth time this year, concluded its session with the passage of its first resolution and the defeat of its second.

The passed resolution, concerning a Student Congress donation toward the Wilmouth Glay Fund, allowed the student congress to use it for charity and disarray for the Congress. The resolution, sponsored by Nancy Calletta, proposed that $500 be given to defray the medical costs resulting from the hospitalization of Glay (see story on page 17).

During discussion on the resolution, Congress treasurer Maryanne Doherty said that the Student Congress does not have the funds available for any donation, but that funds could be obtained by running some event.

Proposals for funding included mixers, tag days, collections from individual students, and the elimination of the Congress budget.

After an amendment was added, the passage was approved by a majority. The resolution, asking for financial support from the 10 major organizations as well as the establishment of some fund raising event, will be presented to the Campus Council for approval. The Congress did not decide what the event will be.

The defeated resolution centered around the appropriation of $100 to each incoming freshman class. The resolution was introduced by Frank Vellaro, and was intended to cut the rising costs of fund raising materials. Main objection to this resolution was that there are no officially designated funds given for that purpose for other classes and that such funds are not available for appropriating.

The resolution was defeated by a margin of 2 to 1.

Swiss Bliss

The effect was exhilarating and the cost to the victim amounted only to embarrassment and the slight irritation caused by the confetti that always seemed to find its way into those untouchable nooks and crannies of the body.

This somewhat deviant behavior, in which the Neuchatel Swiss engaged during the festival weekend, proclaimed that joyality should be an integral component of life. The whole town was unified in striving to have the most enjoyable time possible.

As early as 8 p.m. on Saturday night, the festival was in full swing. In a preconcert, a strainer (a stroker with a more Miyopleric) created little commotion. The movement had reached such a peak that it was impossible to move. The music was so loud that the people were literally dancing in the streets.

Following immediately after Saturday's debauchery, it was indeed fitting that the theme of Sunday's parade was Adieu Her, Bienjarg Demain (Goodbye Yesterday, Hello Tomorrow).

Women's Tennis Team Splits Pair of Matches
By Lisa Callahan
The Women's Tennis Season reached the mid-point mark last week with the Friarettes splitting a pair of matches. On October 7 they were defeated 3-2 by Northeastern University but came back strongly with a 5-2 victory over Assumption on October 15.

Against SMU, PC's first two singles matches were one-sided losses as Maureen Baillie of PC was defeated by Susan Natale, 6-1, 6-1, and Tricia Bruno was shut out 6-0, 6-0 by Patricia Corbett.

Nancy O'Hara brought the Friarettes back in third singles, with some very effective serve and powerful strokes.

Welch said the change was "one way of squelching the idea some people had that food stamps were being abused."

Food Stamp Crackdown

Food stamp program administrators felt a crackdown was needed, according to Bob Welch, a food program supervisor, because "so many people claimed that college students were abusing the program." He felt there was so much publicity about students, that we wanted to do something to assure people that the recipient was people being served by the food stamp program.

PC Implements Energy Awareness Program

other areas where lights are a problem are in the dormitories, extinguished after being in use for short periods.

An awareness program will be implemented against this year to alert the entire PC campus in the energy situation and to ask their cooperation. This will be done through letters to the students and to the resident assistants in each dorm. The response last year was not favorable, said the Committee because the R.A.'s felt that the program was not working. It is estimated that this year PC will use approximately 28,000 barrels of oil with the average cost of $15 per barrel. Last year, PC consumed 23,046 barrels of oil at $12.42 per barrel. This year's total oil cost is estimated at $390,000 as compared to $279,463 last year. In addition, the cost of electricity fell from $279,463 last year estimated at $352,800. The total bill for last year was $1,317,477.

The bill is scheduled for hearings beginning this month, and according to Robert Grignon, legislative assistant for Buckley, "energy will be a major issue in 1976." As another piece of legislation that will languish in Congress. Eliminating student from the food stamp rolls has become an "exhibit" for Buckley, he said, and warned that the response to the bill "should not be underestimated."

Gridders Crush Bentley, Nip Stonehill on Road

By Mike Callahan

A dominating performance by Friar football team upped its record to 3-2 last week with two successive wins. Two weeks ago, PC annihilated Bentley College, 27-0 in Boston. Last week, in front of a capacity crowd at Stonehill, 14-0.

Refocusing after a tough loss to Worcester State, PC head coach Mike Slavin threw two interceptions, but thanks to good defense, PC held the attack. "We played well on both sides of the ball," said Mike Slavin on the board.

The leading rusher for the Friars was Jack Coyne with 86 yards. Rick Philadelphia compiled nine of 24 passes for 96 yards, four of which were caught by Jack Marshall. Tough PC played a strong offensive game, Stonehill came up with more total yards than the Friars. In addition, the Indians had three more first downs.

However, once again the Friar defense was the key. Led by Billy Potter's nine tackles, PC kept the Indians at bay for most of the game. Offensively, PC scored three of the Friars last six touchdowns.

PC was stopped by the BU goaltender, but again with a 1-0 edge. With only about seven minutes left, BU started to move the ball very wet and rainy conditions. The Friars were able to halt the attack.

With only 10:39 left, Chick Portela, finished second and Joe Diwas third.

Seats May Be Worse, But Students May Be Happier

By Jim Travers

In an apparent effort to build student enthusiasm, the Ticket Office in conjunction with the athletic department announced last week that students' season tickets for basketball this season will be available only in the back of students who weren't too happy with the "kitty corner" situation.

The point to remember, though, is that students attending all games.

Soccer Team Boots BU, 2-1

Last Saturday, heavy rains forced the cancellation of a scheduled game with St. Anselms. The Providence mentor.

The Friars will attempt to keep this winning attitude alive when they travel to the "Heights" next Saturday to face Boston College. On Monday, they'll play Assumption College in Worcester as a make-up for a previously rained-out match. The game has been moved to next home appearance next Wednesday against Bentley. It will conclude a very busy week for the Friar Booters.

Fall Golfers Finish Sixth

In ECAC Qualifying Tournament

By Brian Reddy

The Providence College golf team finished their fall season last week with a strong showing in the ECAC qualifying tournament held at the Woonsocket Country Club. The Friars came in sixth place among four shots behind the winning Bentley College team.

Bob Kielbasa was low man for Providence with an 80 Ken Cook and Brendan Davis each shot an 81. Tim Murdock scored an 85 and Bob Kielbasa an 87.

The team finished the season with a 43 record and Coach Prisco is looking forward to the spring when the team will be at full strength with the return of John McMorrow who could not play during the fall season because of injuries.

These fall matches were in reality only practice matches as the scores were not applied to any league scoring or standing. The real season gets into full gear next spring with a full slate of matches, with prospects very good for the Friars.
