On January 17, 1977, a meeting was held among the Student Congress, the Providence College administration, and Father Peterson, O.P., president of PC. Father Peterson, Father Forster, and Judge Weisberger were present. Father Peterson informed the Student Congress that he believed that a law school would be less likely to get involved with politics than would a publicly supported school.

The purpose of this meeting was to discuss the findings of the law school committee. In advance the Student Congress had drawn up a list of nine questions pertaining to the proposed law school. These questions were answered by Father Peterson, Father Forster and Judge Weisberger.

According to Father Peterson, the committee must determine whether the law school should be located in the public or the private sector. Some believe that the state's first legal center should be located in the public sector, perhaps at URI, in order to make it easy for the school to accept state funds.

Father Peterson pointed out that the proposed school would inevitably be bound up with the state court system. PC's president believes that a school located within the private sector would be less likely to get involved with politics than would a publicly supported school.

The two private schools most frequently mentioned as possible legal training centers are Brown University and Providence College. Brown is not interested in establishing a law school because it already administers a medical school. Father Peterson believes that PC is a logical choice.

Father Peterson reiterated the fact that a law school would be established at PC. The Dominican institution's commitment to undergraduate education as its top priority would not change. He stated that he would oppose the law school if it would undermine undergraduate education. The law school project is a totally independent project.

The Student Congress wanted to know if the establishment of a law school would additionally crowd the Slavin Center, Alumni Caféteria, Raymond Hall or any of the school's athletic facilities. Father Peterson answered by stating that the main purpose of the law school, which would exist in a "largely commuter situation," would be to give Rhode Islanders a legal education. Most law students would be coming to PC for classes only. The law school plan would not include residence facilities.

"You're talking about a whole different group of students. Some would be married. Some would be significantly older than you....We would hope that they would find their own residences," he stated.

Weisberger stated that the school would probably get quick approval from the Supreme Court of the state of Rhode Island. He also commented that Rhode Island could only support one law school and the college to start the first law school will have a successful enterprise even if law applications do not continue at their present rate. The law school would not have a great advantage in that it would start as part of a college.

Father Forster stated that a law school would enhance PC's prestige. Judge Weisberger tried to sum up the proposed school's advantages by saying that law study is not an expensive academic discipline. A law school would have more prestige. Law teachers would be able to give PC a competitive edge. Law students were also given a competitive edge by the large number of PC alumni in the legal profession. They would bring "a very positive impact" to the PC community. A law school would enhance PC's faculty roster since many law teachers would be willing to come to PC.

Cowl Working With College To Promote Alcohol Forum

By Richard Ratcliffe

For better or for worse, alcohol has become an integral part of our culture. Wine plays an important part in many religious ceremonies. The Bible acknowledged, "wine is that which makes glad the hearts of men (Paul 104:13)." In the hectic modern day world hundreds of millions of people drink for enjoyment, solace and tranquility.

Yet today, as throughout history, alcohol is also troubling mankind. In almost every society there are those who cannot enjoy alcohol without becoming its slave.

On campuses across the country and here at Providence College, liquor is one of the most, if not the most, important aspects of college social life. In fact, campus surveys show that from 71 to 16 percent of college students drink.

This does not imply that the college population is composed of alcoholic persons or problem drinkers, but does mean that many people give little thought to what their use of alcohol can mean in terms of alcohol-related problems or costs.

When used in moderation, alcohol encourages sociability and induces relaxation. It is often used in excess, if often causes problems for the drinkers and with whom they come in contact.

The script itself is not the best literary piece with which the performers have worked. But, something more is missing — a lack of unity of quality which most Trinity plays possess.

In The Boys From Syracuse, there are a few good musical numbers. "This Is the Life" and "We'll Be Lonesome" have Robert Black and Melanie Jones shining through as truly good performers. The number is gently and moving. And Black shows that he works well with comedy.

"Big Brother," sung by Peter Gerry, is not a classic, but it does Gerry's strength as a performer. He gave the consistently best performance.

The only light and witty number was "O, Diogenes." With the company behind her, Rose Weaver gave the song life and vitality it needed.

The choice of whether or not to drink is up to the individual. If you choose to use alcohol, make sure it doesn't undo you.

For the next few weeks we will be running a weekly feature in The Cowl concerning alcohol. This weekly effort is an attempt to provide factual information about alcohol and to promote responsible decision-making and intelligent behavior with regard to alcohol.

The articles will be leading up to a series of films and discussions to be held on February 28, March 1 and 2. More about the program in the forthcoming issues of The Cowl.

Weaver, in a lady of the evening, was a standout. These were the three best numbers. What happened to the other 11?

Actually, nothing. The script was a campy musical, complete with a happy ending, which was necessary in the late 1930s. But, the performers all showed a streak of their usual level of quality. Why? It could have been an off night. (People are known to have them.)

However, I would think not. When one is dealing with professional performers like the Trinity Square Repertory Company, one comes to expect consistent quality. In The Boys From Syracuse, one does not get quality, consistent or otherwise. With more mature lines representation (See TRINITY, Page 2), no scheduling problems.

D’Arcy expects rise in financial aid

By Celia Kettle

As many students have already discovered, the Financial Aid Office at Providence College is one of the most promising, according to D’Arcy. The Financial Aid Office has been approved for increases in the National Direct Student Loan (NDSL), College Work Study Program (CWSP) and the Supplementary Educational Opportunity Grant (SEOG).

Prosperts in financial aid for the 1977-78 school year are promising, according to D’Arcy. Since D’Arcy assumed the directorship of financial aid the program has doubled. D’Arcy originally handled applications for financial need, which was distributed to about 1250 students. To date, the program has increased to approximately four million dollars with 2060 recipients.

An added reminder to students that February 1, 1977 is the final application deadline for financial aid forms for the 1977-78 academic year. PC applications must be submitted directly to the Financial Aid Office, and the Pell Grant forms (PC3) to the College Scholarship Service in Princeton, N. J., by February 1. BEOG applications will be accepted until the last day and will be placed in all students’ mailboxes.
Music, 1976, Part 1:
Some of the Good, Some of the Bad

By Frank Forlin

It's a new year, and all that. After seeing the musical acts fall before exams, and to say the least, things were different. First, they were the headlining act, which didn't happen the year before. Second, they had a full scale band with them. It's part of their new image and is an apparent attempt to find an audience outside New York and New England. Their latest album, Two's Company, is a good album, but is a radical change from the original idea which Noel Shulman and Ike Fowler had. They had been two very mellow folks who went from coffee house to coffee house singing little hypnotic tunes like "Faster Gun." After two albums and barely edging out of their home territory, it seems someone has gotten the sway of their minds: they went pop, as in pop music. They are still a band, but they look like a pop act, and they will never change. The concert last month was a very good one. The Shulman and Fowler combo have collected a tight band, which seems to know that they are very definitely second stars. They are the snapped-on third, fourth and fifth shelf in a Hair Set, and they know it, for the most part.

The show began electric and ended with a short, almost total acoustic set in the middle.

The concert began with "Dance," the first and best song on their new album. They then played a good round of tunes, not almost token acoustic set in the rock number, and ruins the heavenly harmonies. The new song is in its laid-back, "Take me in Love Again" and "Going on Saturday." The electric adaptations were good, except for the change in my favorite pop song of the group, "Faster Gun." I think that the beauty of the song is based on the extremely or-dinary stuff they played (because the two reggae songs they did were great) and that the musicians think they are at the time, worth lilled.

After all, what can you expect from a group that tries to get 3000 people to yell "Oh-oh" before the first verse. They must think they are a genius because they are a new band.

Following is a series of quick takes on groups which exploded or matured suddenly last year: Steely Dan: In the summer usually, a guy with his shirt unbuttoned down to his navels and long blond hair will be the one doing the difficult guitar licks. Nancy has blood hair. She does the difficult guitar licks. She is way better than I did last year. Their current album, Dreamboat Annie, has a good variety of songs with fine singing. "Faster Gun" is the lead "guitarist." Tom Scholz, would run his pick up and down the bass string for five minutes, then take his thumb-pick up and play with the strings above the bridge of the guitar, giving a very clinky sound. They call that music?

But they didn't bore everyone. Of the 9,000 bodies in attendance, perhaps 9,000 would be there to see Boston. But after 75 minutes I was three ultra-high volume guitars, a rumbling bass which was played by a guy who needed a dave of vaalum, and a drum set I couldn't figure out which end of the sticks to use. I couldn't bear a damn thing. When the concert was over I asked for a talk, he looked like a movie character with the sound projector off.

I forget what they played. That may be due to my inability to hear. Of course.

By the way, their outfit, Boston, is good for playing frisbee.

The play is light entertainment, but the performances were disappointing.

Mediorcity does not suit Trinity Square.

Death Penalty: No Answer

With the execution of Gary Gilmore last week came a renewed public interest in the legitimacy of the death penalty. Most news media, while covering the event, analyzed the possible ramifications this occurrence will have on the entire criminal justice system.

No one came up with any answers. The consensus seemed to be that the surrounding capital punishment superseded legal evaluation in that it degenerates into an emotional battle. Because of the emotions involved, any decision on the subject would be somewhat unscientific, that is prejudiced.

The Cow, in keeping pace with its professional brethren, conducted a poll on the death penalty. Out of the 100 people polled, 61 thought the death penalty was a deterrent to crime. However, as the questions grew more specific, the answers became less affirmative.

Are they willing to support the reinstatement of the death penalty? 51 students answered affirmatively. Advocates of capital punishment did 10 percent margin when asked if they could, if in the position to, sentence a person to death.

A very small percentage of PC students favored a rigid system for the disposal of execution. The majority preferred an individual consideration in each case. The question remains, who has the authority to condemn someone to death? Does murder compensate for murder? Does a person become so useless and threatening to society that execution is the only means of dealing with that person?

Prolonged murder receives the strongest penalty. A cold-blooded murderer often seems inhuman. Do his actions negate his right to life? Americans are guaranteed the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Somewhat of a cliché now, this clause of the Bill of Rights has been the grounds for many challenges to the constitutionality of a question. Extinguishing another's life, taking away the highest privilege of man, seems wrong whether it is within or without the system of justice.

In the case of Gilmore, his execution was not actually necessary. He himself has made his sentence but he preferred to be called a manipulator of society. His opting for a firing squad over life incarceration, was labeled a manifestation of his psychotic personality.

The Bill of Rights, written in the spirit of the French Revolution, also stipulated that forms of legal retribution are not to be within this realm of "cruel and unusual punishment." This term could be interpreted very loosely. Is facing a life behind bars actually cruel in a psychological sense? Is death, for some individuals, responsible for a decision of execution? It is a moral question but not that of existence-life implications.

It is easy to say that the death penalty is a deterrent to crime, but who will actually decide the law, those with political power? Who was responsible for a decision of execution? Is it a moral question but ethical platitudes unfortunately lose a lot in practicality.

Commentary:

Carter's Pardon

By George P. Lennon

The resounding question of granting a blanket pardon to the draft evaders of the Vietnam conflict appears to have been answered in our new political hero, Jimmy Carter. Though Carter has answered the given "question," there should be at least a minor epitaph to the issue.

The pardon should raise two further questions: First, what are our obligations as citizens, and secondly, should such expedient moves for political gains be tolerated?

The answer to the first question is rather basic. In accepting a given government, you also accept your responsibilities to that government, especially if the government, such as our own, is expected to provide us with given rights. However, once an individual finds that he can no longer accept his obligations, he has the right to leave his country, which the draft evaders found so easy.

Yet, in exerting that right, these citizens have declared their disloyalty to the people and therefore rightly suffer the consequences of their actions. To grant an outright pardon to these individuals is a travesty of justice to all those who have so willingly worked within the given system for change.

The second question can only be answered by ourselves. In this case, President Carter assumed he was acting in agreement with the American people. However, his rather hasty actions on the matter strongly question his fear of political abuse and shows a lack of some measure of prudence. Granted it was a pledge he made, but I can only wonder if Carter's actions last Friday were made for the people or for his political career.

Hopefully, the American people and our President will never have to be subjected to such a position again. Granting a pardon to anyone, even Richard Nixon, always leaves a feeling that justice has been blinded.

Dear Editor,

Let me ask the question of the writers of the informative article in the Wednesday, January 19, 1977 edition of The Cowl, entitled "Sorry, Folks, But They Do Exist. What is a Mondo?" and the term "Mondo" originated in the early 1960's. A "Mondo" at times had the connotation of a particular stereotyped person. This figure was seen standing against a shopping center.

As a student here, the word "Mondo" is given to a certain group of student commuters. This word "Mondo" is given to indicate "Different Styles." The resident students gave this group of commuter students this name because they are different. The difference stems primarily in dress. The commuter group wears nice fashionable clothing including: knit pants, leather shoes, knit (polyester and cotton) shirts and sweat suits. One occasion may view one wearing the cute "nose" coat or sweater. It is a known fact that one encounters good as well as bad people in all walks of life, and to classify, in discriminate, to ostracize just because someone is different is not the role of a true world citizen. If people are so inhumane as to judge a book by its cover, then they are living solely on the basis of the clothes the person or even the schedule of classes he or she chooses, or by the friends one associates with, then the character of those who are doing the judging leaves much to be desired. In this case, the two so-called writers and whoever has written a rebuttal will receive the brunt of my criticism.

Sincerely yours,

Michael T. R. Napolitano

(Editor's note: The two so-called writers in the two letters was not designed to be malicious. The authors who were both commuters, were attempting to show the dichotomy with the resident students. We regret any offense incurred by the article.)

Dear Editor,

I believe that the entire student body, especially the commuters, should know the true facts involving the Dillon Club election during the past month.

I feel Rick Parrillo used his friendship and influence within the Student Congress to set up double standards for candidates campaigning.

1. Parrillo had everyone who was running to pick up nomination papers on or before 9:30 a.m. on Monday, November 22. Cheryl Groccia received her papers at 9:30 a.m. and therefore had a head start on receiving signatures before I even received my nomination papers. The reason this receiving of papers early was unfair is because whoever has the papers back in the Student Congress Office first has name first on ballot. Each candidate should have an equal chance at this.

2. Unopposed candidates were banned from the lower level because it was said they supported the opposition. In previous years, unopposed candidates were allowed unlimited access to the Sla Vin Center on election day, regardless of whom they supported.

On December 2, a meeting was held in Father McPftail's office to discuss the idea of unopposed candidates being banned from the lower level of the Center. Present at this meeting was the chairperson of the ways and means committee of the Student Congress, Miss Ellen Barnes. Along with Miss Barnes were other prominent members of Congress.

After a long discussion, we were told by Miss Barnes, that if the three unopposed candidates would stay clear of the lower level of Sla Vin Center on election day, she would assure us there would be no election violations. Miss Barnes then read to us from the Congress' constitution, article 4, section 4 which reads, "There shall be no campaigning by anyone on the day of the election." In reading this she stressed the words "by anyone." Because of this regulation she had convinced the three unopposed candidates to stay clear of the lower level for their good and mine. The Student Congress constitution also reads in article 7, PENALTY, "a penalty for infractions of the rules shall be disqualification." A memo was posted on the door of the Dillon Club by Student Congress reminding everyone that there was to be no campaigning by anyone on the day of the election. Permission was given for him to vote, to eat lunch, and to make a deposit in the bank for the Dillon Club. On doing so, he had the honor of having the president of Congress following him to and from the bank, the voting table, and the cafeteria with his "nose to the floor." Yet members of Congress insisted they were not bloodhounds.

4. Some other facts about this election which must be focused upon are, why did Student Congress members, who were collecting ballots, open and examine some ballots which are supposedly secret? Also I know of at least one other known vote, but whose name was crossed off the voting list. I was told to him by someone else who said his name to me, will refrain from mentioning their names until further questions.

These facts are just some of the irregularities which occurred in this unfair election which will hurt all those three (so-called writers) within the Dillon Club. The constitutional question that was raised was what was nothing wrong. This person is a very close friend of Rick Parrillo. When Congress members were informed of this violation, the reply that I was given by, was that the Congress was that "we are not blood hounds." However, Lou Zamberrelli, the treasurer of 1976, and the unopposed treasurer of 1977, asked permission from Congress to enter the lower level. Permission was given for him to vote, to eat lunch, and to make a deposit in the bank for the Dillon Club. On doing so, he had the honor of having the president of Congress following him to and from the bank, the voting table, and the cafeteria with his "nose to the floor." Yet members of Congress insisted they were not bloodhounds.

5. Some other facts about this election which must be focused upon are, why did Student Congress members, who were collecting ballots, open and examine some ballots which are supposedly secret? Also I know of at least one other known vote, but whose name was crossed off the voting list. I was told to him by someone else who said his name to me, will refrain from mentioning their names until further questions.

The whole problem stems from the fact that some individuals were trying to gain and freedom of the press under the guise of the student newspaper. It is hard to imagine a country without freedom of the press. When the press transgresses their rights, it should be restrained by the people who are the owners of the press. The student congress is the one that owns this newspaper. The congress should be restrained by the people who are the owners of the press.

I strongly feel that this election was mishandled by Student Congress and their constitution should be revised. I feel that further incidents will not occur in future elections. Further queries about the students deem it necessary, another election should be held, or at least further inquiries should be made into this election.

Thank you,

Domenic Coletta '78

Dear Barrie K. Balemian '77

I am addressing my comments to the anonymous article that appeared in the Wednesday, January 19, 1977 publication of The Cowl that concerned the status of commuter students. I believe that freedom of speech should be restrained by the proper legal authorities. It is not the role of the student congress to determine what is faith and what is improper speech. The so-called "Mondos" are to be treated with the same respect as any other commuter student. As a student here, the word "Mondo" is heard occasionally, but I must be the being the vision in my eyes... because I don't see a single form of life resembling those characteristics. So where does this term "Mondo" come from in this present day situation at PC?

As stated in the article in The Cowl, the word "Mondo" is given to a certain group of student commuters. As mentioned in the two letters, the word "Mondo" is used to indicate "Different Styles." The resident students gave this group of commuter students this name because they are different. The difference stems primarily in appearance. People who look as if it was well-kept head of hair, or a head of hair that looks as if it was sprayed, or worn high on the forehead. This commuter group generally was wearing white and therefore had a head start on the resident students. One can immediately tell the commuter population and a resident student. The resident students appear as if after classes are over they are going to climb a mountain, or maybe paint a house, or even work on a pig farm! The so-called "Mondos" appear favorably by the commuter student. Last Year's Nemesis, St. Bonnies', on Tap

By John Mullaney

When Providence College takes to the floor this coming Tuesday, everyone can expect a good ballgame. One thing is for sure, it can't be any worse than the BU fiasco.

The Friars, in trying to chalk up their eleventh consecutive victory, will also be seeking to revenge last year's 78-70 loss at the hands of St. Bonaventure in New York.

The first encounter was won by the Friars 7-4 and started the Providence team on a four-game winning streak. The game to be played at Brohan Auditorium, should be no different than the first meeting. There will probably be a lot of penalties and a lot of goals. Brown will be at a couple of big PC's victory over BU gave the Black and White a 10-game win streak, which is their longest in the last 8 years. The team itself is shooting 53.1 percent from the field, which is a good percentage. The team has had an average of 84 percent from the field in the second half of action against Virginia Tech. If they put on a similar performance Tuesday, watch out for them. The weaknesses of their opponents can be seen in their defense, which is their best. Providence will be seeking to capitalize on defense and rebounding.

Overall, though, it should be a good ballgame. Nothing is for sure, but it can't be any worse than the BU fiasco.

Who was the poor soul who once said, "success isn't contagious?" He might roll over in his grave after hearing of the Providence College Lady Friars latest score. After winning a couple more games in their merry way while leaving beaten opponents strewn along on their path, the Lady Friars disposed of two more adversaries Wednesday, January 26, 1977.

In a game that the Lady Friars put away early, with 17 points, while Mary Casey added 16 in a game that the Lady Friars out-muscled a smaller but quicker opponents The Friars played 18 points and nine rebounds. Carmen Ross, meanwhile, is the best a St. Bonnie's, on Tap.

The weaknesses of their opponents can be seen in their defense, which is their best. Providence will be seeking to capitalize on defense and rebounding.

Overall, though, it should be a good ballgame. Nothing is for sure, but it can't be any worse than the BU fiasco.

In the end, it wasn't the showdown at OK Corral, or World War III, or even the Sly Williams Memorial Shootout, as every Rhode Islander with even the most casual of rooting interests insisted it would be.

Instead, PC's 82-71 handling of interstate rival URI was a tense, emotional affair that showcased two of the very best basketball teams in New England. There was really no need for riot police or attack dogs and, yes, the game was played at the Civic Center, not the Golani Heights as one area scribe had suggested.

When it was over there really was no doubt about the better team, all team, fanaticism aside,obody could argue the simple fact remains that the Friars are a very solid basketball team, one that works hard and doesn't make a lot of mistakes. They deserve to be ranked in the country.

URI on the other hand, despite their stellar start (six straight wins) could be in for some rough sledding. The Rams have a good nucleus of talent in Stan Wright, Jiggy Williams and the incomparable Mr. Sly Williams, but after that there's a bit of a talent dropoff. Tennessee transfer Irv Chatman could be a big help but he's currently ineligible.

At the outset, it looked as if URI would turn the game into a runaway, as they jumped off to an early 10-2 bulge on three runs. It was really no need for riot police or attack dogs after that, there's a bit of talent and Williams had one of his finest nights in a PC uniform, scoring 20 points along with three assists. He also did a good job on his opposite number from URI, Jiggy Williams. Williams finished with 20, too, but tired badly toward the end.

Dwight also proved why he deserves honorary membership into the Flying Wallendas, exhibiting a few of his lighter-than-air maneuvers around the basket, his best coming at 7:40 of the second period when he drove for the hoop, scored the basket and the Friars took full command of the contest.

Sly Campbell had his usual excellent game, finishing with 22 points and 11 rebounds, both of which were high for the evening. Campbell dressed out five assistants and blocked three shots to boot. He was the factor from beginning to end for the Friars. Bob Cooper and Bob Misevicius banged the boards for 11 and 10 caroms respectively.

Now, on to Sly Williams. Almost from the time Sly changed his mind about coming to Providence in the fall, the Friars have been in for some rough going. Williams was greeted by a cacophony of catcalling and was marred by an injury to Mc Gavitt for the hoop, scored the basket, his best coming at 7:40 of the second period when he drove for the hoop, scored the basket and the Friars took full command of the contest.

Colin Ahern continued his superb play as he scored the Friars' first goal of the game at the minute mark when he tipped in Ron Wilson's shot from the point. Ron made it 2-0 at 3:45 when he took a pass from his brother Randy and beat Larries' goalie Harry Aikens. Jeff Whissell made it 3-0 at 3:56 seconds later on a nifty pass from John McMorrow.

Things settled down for awhile until Providence exploded with three goals in the last five minutes of the stanza. Jim Kern tipped in Ron Wilson's shot from the point. Ron made it 2-0 at 3:45 when he took a pass from his brother Randy and beat Larries' goalie Harry Aikens. Jeff Whissell made it 3-0 at 3:56 seconds later on a nifty pass from John McMorrow.
