

THE PROSE POEM: AN INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL

Volume 4 | 1995

Beyond Confessions Sibyl James

© Providence College

The author(s) permits users to copy, distribute, display, and perform this work under the following conditions: (1) the original author(s) must be given proper attribution; (2) this work may not be used for commercial purposes; (3) the users may not alter, transform, or build upon this work; (4) users must make the license terms of this work clearly known for any reuse or distribution of this work. Upon request, as holder of this work's copyright, the author(s) may waive any or all of these conditions.

The Prose Poem: An International Journal is produced by The Berkeley Electronic Press (bepress)
for the Providence College Digital Commons.
<http://digitalcommons.providence.edu/prosepoems/>

Sibyl James

BEYOND CONFESSIONS

I guess we're old and kind enough to be trusted to watch your daughter while your wife leaves town and doesn't watch us. I guess there's wisdom in the final giving up of touch that we gave into readily for years, scalding somebody, or ourselves. Then I used to think there were too many confessions.

And so few sins now: only these stolen beats of salsa that even strangers in a dance class practice hip to hip, the brush of our elbows in the kitchen camaraderie of chefs passing big knives and wine.

Let me slip my fingers briefly as a comb's teeth through this silver that's become your black hair. That much will feed our present, cost the world so little there'll be nothing to confess.