

THE PROSE POEM: AN INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL

Volume 6 | 1997

Lawant (Hotel Niagara)
Javant Biaruja

© Providence College

The author(s) permits users to copy, distribute, display, and perform this work under the following conditions: (1) the original author(s) must be given proper attribution; (2) this work may not be used for commercial purposes; (3) the users may not alter, transform, or build upon this work; (4) users must make the license terms of this work clearly known for any reuse or distribution of this work. Upon request, as holder of this work's copyright, the author(s) may waive any or all of these conditions.

The Prose Poem: An International Journal is produced by The Berkeley Electronic Press (bepress)
for the Providence College Digital Commons.
<http://digitalcommons.providence.edu/prosepoems/>

Javant Biaruja

LAWANT (HOTEL NIAGARA)

In the meantime, ducks and decorative embalmings inhabit this place. Limpid are the varied perfumes or unperfumed peaks. Ah, these guests may revivify these many storeys, muses the caretaker before the abandoned front door. Profound ceilings inlaid; closed-off elevator, uncranking, hooded, hushed, calm; submerged swimming-pool; noiseless rooms of the dead. Outside, trees are aflame: hibiscus. Long roostered tails are brushing against the glittering windows between millefiori. Arabesques of the house—malevolent eyes—turn tourists away. Seven wives aflame with subterranean love (teak merchant Liu Siu Hong in heaven above or the world below) whose felled padauk and teak and etched frangipani, uprooted, gold and dark red, offer something pure in the heat. Their excavated proportions resound to Arjuna and the farthest volcanoes. There is a little Javanese boy all alone, the caretaker's son, who is teasing a scorpion on the floor of the ruined foyer. No guests yet. Arid palimpsests and dust illumine the deities.