

THE PROSE POEM: AN INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL

Volume 6 | 1997

Not ‘Why Build’ But ‘Which Tools’

Chris Volpe

© Providence College

The author(s) permits users to copy, distribute, display, and perform this work under the following conditions: (1) the original author(s) must be given proper attribution; (2) this work may not be used for commercial purposes; (3) the users may not alter, transform, or build upon this work; (4) users must make the license terms of this work clearly known for any reuse or distribution of this work. Upon request, as holder of this work's copyright, the author(s) may waive any or all of these conditions.

The Prose Poem: An International Journal is produced by The Berkeley Electronic Press (bepress) for the Providence College Digital Commons.
<http://digitalcommons.providence.edu/prosepoems/>

Chris Volpe

NOT 'WHY BUILD' BUT 'WHICH TOOLS'

The neighborhood is buzzing with the news: someone's going to be resurrected like Lazarus at midnight.

A distant cousin writes of plans to set himself on fire and enter his hometown post office. Something about a letter he could never bring himself to send. I once owned a letter-opener in the shape of a tiny silver sword. I used it to rid an undiscovered country of villains and dangerous beasts. Last night our garage was dragged off, piece by piece, and buried somewhere by the neighbor's dog. It was blue with pink tasseled window shades. No sense rushing things, but somebody's got to feed that dog.

If you get out of bed just right, says Thoreau, anything at all is possible. The universe is tall as a runway. At dawn, white and silver ironing boards and irons drift lazily across an orange-pink sky.