

THE PROSE POEM: AN INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL

Volume 7 | 1998

Poem XXXIV Ruth Behar

© Providence College

The author(s) permits users to copy, distribute, display, and perform this work under the following conditions: (1) the original author(s) must be given proper attribution; (2) this work may not be used for commercial purposes; (3) the users may not alter, transform, or build upon this work; (4) users must make the license terms of this work clearly known for any reuse or distribution of this work. Upon request, as holder of this work's copyright, the author(s) may waive any or all of these conditions.

The Prose Poem: An International Journal is produced by The Berkeley Electronic Press (bepress) for the Providence College Digital Commons.
<http://digitalcommons.providence.edu/prosepoems/>

Ruth Behar

POEM XXXIV

My grandmother used to say about my grandfather: “We have been married for over fifty years and I still don’t know if he prefers the breast or the thigh of a chicken. He always says it’s the same to him, but I want to know which part he really likes better.” He refused to tell her, refused to admit to a preference. I used to think he acted that way out of kindness, so she could eat what she most wanted. But my dear grandfather, please forgive me for disturbing the silence of your grave, lately I wonder: Did your kindness force my grandmother to give away, always, what she wanted for fear it was what you wanted? All those years, did you eat the breast when you wanted the thigh, not out of kindness but for the pleasure of taking from her mouth the taste of the flesh she longed for?