PC feels the pinch

Tuition, fees, room, board affected

By Joyce Simon

Herbert J. D'Arcy, director of Financial Aid, has revealed the federal allocations for Providence College's Student Financial Aid Programs. The cuts have been drastic this academic year. Despite the fact that tuition and fees for the 1981-82 year will be increased by $840 for next year, PC has had its federal aid reduced. The question is: how will this money be used?

According to D'Arcy, RI as a state has had a reduced federal funding for the next school year that is 93% lower than last year. D'Arcy attributes this state-wide phenomenon to the accelerated and recently implemented formula process by which schools apply for financial aid. All the Northeast has clearly understood this process and took full advantage of it last year, we are suffering reductions this year because of the rest of the country has realized how the system works, and are applying this year for money they were entitled to, but did not request last year.

While PC has had an increase in grants and loans, it has had a corresponding decrease in the amount of federal aid. The federal allocation is based on the current year's enrollment. This causes much concern for the Office of Financial Aid, because not only has the allotment been reduced, but the minimum hourly wage is being increased for 1980-81, from $2.65 to $2.90, the RI minimum wage. Whereas the average hourly wage was $3.04 last year, the 12% increase in the hourly wage will boost next year's average hourly rate to approximately $4.25.

These two factors pose a problem in terms of the number of students eligible for College Work Study. Since the Office of Financial Aid must increase the average aid in order to accommodate the higher average wage, there is a need to solve this problem, the off-campus Summer Work-Study Program will be severely reduced. By reducing this program, the Office of Financial Aid will be able to run a College Work-Study Program during the 1980-81 academic year that will be comparable to the current year, in terms of the number of people working.

Considering the increase in costs and the reduction of federal aid, D'Arcy was asked whether or not the overall need of students will be fulfilled next year in the same proportion that students' needs were to this year. He replied, "The ability to meet the increase in costs will be definitely affected by increased family incomes resulting in higher family contributions, most reductions in institutional grants in aid (PC money), state scholarship eligibility, and increases in Basic Grant eligibility."

Commenting on the future, D'Arcy stated, "It appears that Student Financial Aid programs will not enjoy any appreciable increase in federal programs as a result of the Administration's attempt to get the economy under control."

The financial controls proposed in the plan include:

—requiring that all Congress checks be signed by two signatures. Congress is the only student organization, at present, which is not required to do so.

—adoption of a rule stating that all expenditures over a specified amount (a $250 figure was proposed) be required to gain the approval of the entire Congress, prior to issuance.

—an establishment of a limit on banquet expenditures.

—the revision of the present method of appropriation from the College.

The Congress discussed possible ways of preventing future defaults. McGunagle pointed out that the present deficit was not incurred by the Congress, and Bob Goudie emphasized that no wrong-doing caused the deficit. McGunagle proposed a five point plan as a safeguard against budgetary deficits.

Manning captures BOG presidency

By Lewis DiPietro

Last Thursday, an election was held in lower Slavin to select next year's BOG Executive Board. The winners are as follows: L.J. Manning, president; Mark O'Rourke, vice-president; and Liz Olekas, treasurer. These officers will assume active responsibilities on May 3.

The BOG is an organization consisting entirely of members of the student body, which programs the broad social and cultural events for the PC community, manages the last Resort, and oversees all activities within Slavin Center.

The first order of business for the new Executive Board will be to conduct interviews for the various chairperson positions available for the 1980-81 school year. These interviews will be held on Sunday, March 30, from 1:00 to 4:00 p.m. and again during the BOG finals.

The second interview session will be on Monday, March 31, from 6:00 to 10:00 p.m. Any student with a grade point average of 2.0 or better is eligible to apply. The new board's main objective will be to pick only the most dedicated and responsible people for next year's BOG.

They are looking for people to chair the following committees: Last Resort, Lectures, Travel, Fine Arts, Film, Concert, Publicity, Video, and Social. They are also looking for a new secretary any programmer.

Sex change proposed

By Steve Sylvia

Will there be a new women's dorm in September? According to Rev. Walter J. Heath, O.P., director of Residence, it is a very real possibility. The reasons behind such action are these: (1) There are 925 beds available to men on the PC campus. Presently, there have been signed up for dorm space in September. From previous experience, the Residence Office expects about 50 beds to these upperclassmen, leaving approximately 431 spaces for incoming freshmen and transfers. The Administrators Office expects around 350 new male resident students next year, resulting in a surplus of about 81 beds. (2) There are 925 beds available for women on the PC campus. At this time, 578 of these beds have been reserved by on-campus women. Figuring in...
McGunagle proposes five-point plan

McGunagle pointed out, however, that the Student Congress is the only independent student organization on campus, and he sees no need to change its status. As a whole, the Executive Board is against any further control over the actions of the student body.

Bob Goudie, the student representative to the Committee on Administration, reported that the rising cost of energy was the main impetus behind the tuition and boarding hikes. Tuition will be raised $300 per semester, and the cost of room and board will be an additional $120 per semester. He noted that standard policy allows students who have paid deposits on next year’s room and board prior to the rate increase, to opt for reimbursement if they so desire.

Goudie also mentioned that Joseph, Stephen and Guzman halls are being considered in a proposal to convert a men’s dorm into a women’s dorm. He said that the reasons given for this included a slight decrease in the number of men enrolling as freshmen, and a larger percentage of male upperclassmen opting to live off-campus, leaving 100 empty beds in the men’s dorms. Another move that was proposed was the elimination of the quad in Meagher Hall, converting it to a lounge area for students. Presently, freshman women in Meagher are assigned to single rooms.

In other areas, the first campus council meeting was announced. It will be held Wednesday, March 26, at 7:00 p.m., in Aquinas Room I. The council hopes to update the status of a number of student organizations, and eventually create a detailed listing of campus activities, including applications for membership to the various clubs. This listing would be made available to incoming freshmen.

Brian Moran, senior student representative to the Corporation, announced that the Corporation has voted to name the music building Catherine of Sierra Hall. He also mentioned that bids from sub-contractors for the fieldhouse are due April 23.

The Lifestyles Committee reported that plans are still being examined to create a coffee lounge in the library. If instituted, the lounge would be situated in one of the study rooms on the second floor, and would probably be open between the hours of 7:00 and 10:00 p.m., Monday through Thursday nights. Plans for the lounge are still being formulated.

Finally, Congress President Bill Pearson said that letters have been distributed to the student body, explaining the student activity fee increase. He commented the hard work done by vice-president Marie Robitaille and treasurer Ken McGunagle, who were responsible for getting the $10 increase approved. He also commended McGunagle's five-point plan.

Around the campus

Art Display

The art department is hosting an Art and Sculpture display which will open to the public all day, from 9:00 a.m. until 4:00 p.m., in Slavin 203.

Art Show

There will be an art show in the Art Gallery, Lower Campus, every day through Sunday, March 29. It will feature paintings by Ellen Connor, drawings by Noelle Ansaldo, and drawings and paintings by Maria Merlino.

Clam Shell

The Clam Shell Alliance is sponsoring a lecture on “Nuclear Power and Alternative Energy Sources” in Aquinas Lounge on Wednesday, March 26, at 7:00 p.m.

Cowl corrects error

"Do PC students have it too easy?", an article appearing in the March 5 edition of the Cowl, contained errors which warrant correction. The article dealt with the Academic Affairs Committee’s discussion of the ongoing curriculum review. Contrary to what was stated, this committee, which is chaired by Dr. F. P. Mackay, is not an arm of the Faculty Senate.

In clarification of this point, the review of the present curriculum by the Academic Affairs Committee and the impending review by the Faculty Senate, is a single aspect of a comprehensive analysis of the entire curriculum. This task has been undertaken by the Faculty Senate and the College Planning Team.

The article erroneously attributed to Dr. John J. Colby, Faculty Senate president, a statement explaining that a five-course curriculum for upperclassmen would necessitate the hiring of 40 or more new faculty members. It was further written that the acquisition of this group of new faculty members would result in an immediate tuition rise.

In actuality, Dr. Colby stated that a five-course curriculum may be more costly, but membership to the student body would be available. Abstinent from the article, however, was the explanation of various proposals presently being discussed which might alleviate or at least lessen the expense involved if these plans are accepted and implemented.
Abraxas art show
By Maureen Plouffe

The PC Abraxas Art Club is sponsoring its First Annual Art Exhibit and Contest for Rhode Island high school students this week. The entries, over 200 in all, were placed in six categories: drawing, painting, sculpture, ceramics, printmaking and photography.

The panel of judges, composed of faculty and student members of the art department, evaluated the entries on the basis of technical merit, imagination and presentation. Cash prizes of $20, $10 and $5 for first, second and third places in each category were awarded at a reception and awards ceremony on Tuesday, March 25. Winners of the nine Honorable Mention awards each received an official Providence College beer stein. The judges also presented six Special Judges’ Awards for entries that did not fit into any of the six categories, but which they felt merited recognition for their extraordinary appeal.

The Abraxas Club began planning the project last December. "We put a lot of work into this exhibit," commented Tom McManimon, Abraxas Club president, "and the high school kids can be extremely proud of the fine quality of their work and individual artistic abilities. We also hope that some of these students will find that PC is just the place to develop their talents."

The exhibit, which was financed by the Admissions Office, will be on display in Slavin 203 through Friday, March 29.

Procedures for Registration, beginning April 22, will be as follows:

1. All students will obtain their registration cards from the Department of their concentration. This card will indicate time and day of registration. The student will confer with his or her advisor and complete the card listing the courses to be pursued. The exceptions to the above directions are those students who are following an individualized program, undecided, and double majors. These students will obtain their registration cards in the Office of the Dean.

2. All cards must be signed by their advisor.

3. Students will proceed to Slavin 110 for registration.

   - If all courses are available, the cards for each course will be pulled from the bins and checked with the student at which time he or she will leave if all is correct. Should a student desire to over-enroll in a particular course, he or she must obtain an overload form with the proper signature from the Department in question. The student will retain the pink copy and deliver the white copy to the Office of the Registrar any time during registration and for a period extending one week later, ending May 2nd. Should the student be denied approval for over-enrollment, any further changes to his or her schedule will be completed at the adjustment period, Sept. 4 - Oct. 14.

4. A last reminder that Faculty will not be present at the Registration Site and all problems are to be attended to at Department area.
Editor's Memo

So long, farewell...

It is hard to believe that a year has passed since I first addressed Cowl readers from this lofty (?). Published each full week of "the academic year and one summer edition during June," the Providence Cowl is a "school-year institution" and "free time, and to offer constructive suggestions..." This includes the ideas of others and allows for rapid refereeing... Whether it be offering ideas or a little more personal enjoyment... When dealing with money, especially student money, there is simply no margin for error.

Financial Report expense... A primary focus of the Cowl is on "reporting what we do..." My original intention of "keeping the college community..." and "offering ideas or an offshoot..." Whether it be offering ideas or a little more personal enjoyment... When dealing with money, especially student money, there is simply no margin for error.
Find a solution to the decreasing family life in the United States, one must begin to question the cause before we will ever be prepared to rectify the effect. I personally blame this period of decadence on the American institutions of higher learning. Basically, colleges and universities are raising the American family. These institutions have not effectively taught women the necessary prerequisites vital to the support of the marriage. These institutions are also granting admission to an excessive number of women.

In addition to educating women on the home economics level, the female student was taught that a better quality husband could be found on a campus. The male was not about to complain because he had finally discovered a better looking coeds on the outside. Obviously any exchange where two parties are mutually satisfied is ideal! The situation grew out of hand when this coed had been so compliant with her academic training began to demand a career of her own. The institutions failed to solve this dilemma when the female was granted the opportunity to strive for a liberal arts degree. Apparently it was the old story, “Give them a little and they want the whole thing.” Hence, the family was destroyed in two ways. The over-educated career minded female no longer wanted to settle down with her children. Secondly, the male worked harder and harder at the job market by the female who only acquired her job through company desperation to fill its government mandated quotas. These institutions of higher learning will never be able to correct the disorder that presently exists. It is only solved in a nationally structured coed curriculum. These courses of study might emphasize the domestic chores of yesteryear. To add a flare of spice into the program lessons might also include book-accounting, how to press a pile of pants, daily soap opera scheduling, and theatre arts.

Presenting these courses as something totally complex would erase the females silly notions of careers in business, medicine and education. For those persistent few who will always demand a career, schools might offer degrees in nursing, design and art. My intention is not to take the color and cheerfulness out of women, so the schools might offer to the males who the colleges might offer to the female students offered to the male students who might also offer to the female students.

Remember, the more women know about the real business world, the more apprehension they will show before seeking entry to it. The male must begin to play a more significant role in correcting this situation by pointing out the female ineffecticiencies to more women.

Mr. John Swaboda and his PC band as to why they did not see it fit to be part of the spirit of the ECAC tournament (by the way, Cornell did see fit to bring their band along which, again, exemplified their spirit at the Gardens). We suppose, perhaps, that Mr. Swaboda had no knowledge that the PC hockey team was in a post season tournament.

It is hard to understand why the PC hockey team, who works as hard if not harder than any other athletic team on campus, just does not get the support that they so justly deserve. It seems to us that the hockey team who can show the post-season results from their hard work, determination and spirit should receive as much if not more support from the entire PC “family” that turns out for the Friars Clue. In closing, we would like to commend those loyal fans who made the trip to Boston to show their support (rather than attending a St. Patrick’s Day formal, planning for a Friar

We missed you at the Garden

Dear Editor:

Frank Keane would like to congratulate the hockey coach and team Lamoriello for the hard work and tremendous desire that they maintained all season long. They upheld this standard of excellence right up to the ECAC semi-finals at the Boston Garden, where fan support was lacking, to say the least. It seems hard to believe that a school such as Cornell University, which is 100 miles away, can show more fan support than the expected home crowd from Providence, which is only 50 miles away. It was quite evident that we were outnumbered and outnumbered throughout the night by “true and loyal” hockey fans from Ithaca, NY.

We would also like to question Mr. John Swaboda and his PC band as to why they did not see it fit to be part of the spirit of the ECAC tournament (by the way, Cornell did see fit to bring their

P.J., Billy and the whole gang were my family, and poor Bary had died. This weekend didn’t help matters at all. Dad loved the game and was busy offering autographs and cartoon sketches. What more proof could you ask for?

All loopholes were covered. I had the system down pat. Every now and then I’d call home to reassure myself of which family was the one that had to admit behind all my glee at getting away with something, I felt bad. All these people were so impressed because of what they thought my father did.

In my “Friar interview” last week, I was finally shocked to my senses. I wasn’t expecting the question, “Doesn’t your father do the Family Circus?” I was afraid they could split out.

This had really gotten around! It was later that night that I realized I had left without explaining the truth.

In my Sacraments class we learned that to confess our sins, we must say we’re sorry to God and the community. Well, community, this was the best way I could publicly say I was sorry. The fun is over. I am not Dolly. The next step is to call Dad and tell him he is not Bill.

I hope you learned your lesson well...

...aren’t I a good liar though?

Kelly’s Keene Comments

Everyone reading this will soon be very grateful to me. I am about to teach you a very important lesson. You must work very hard to follow. It’s about telling little lies that aren’t true. You...shouldn’t...The Family Circus. They started out innocently enough in conversation about interesting fathers’ occupations. Then, presto! Dad’s name was “Bill” and he was famous. Before you knew it I was telling to say “Only kidding!!!” the rumor was around campus like salmonella.

Kids take an embarrassed look, “Hey, it’s my Dad!” and used it for the next group session. I kept telling myself that if they were smart, they’d just look up my father’s first name. I was then to play along the story, without ever thinking they’d believe me. I mean, that just goes to show how you trust some people are. With time, things got worse. Diverse topics, satisfied crowd

By Jeff Esposito

The PC poetry readings continued last Thursday night with the work of poet Brendan Galvin. A reading like this should have come at the end of the series since it was the stuff which terrific finales are made of. It transcended the merely profound, and even the simply sublime.

Aquinas Lounge was never so comfortably crowded. Members of the faculty were present in a less formal guise than protocol usually allows. Students were plentiful, an odd mishap for a poetry reading. We had come to hear a piece or two of fine poetry, and we knew there would be no disappointment.

Galvin read in a voice that was the sound of unassuming familiarity, a voice that could be known without ever having been met. A good movie, a good piece of music, a good meal, allows you to resolve the dullness of an everyday existence. This reading was even better.

The poet spoke on such diverse topics as old clothes, bats (of the blood sucking variety), children, and New England weather. All these different things brought common memories to mind. Every poem, serious or sardonic, had a quality of remembering. The imagery was tangible and that is the most striking thing about the works.

We dir and clevevices are the tools of a lesser poet. Galvin is funny. Understanding and empathy are fashionable games played by some writers. In the piece “Bats,” Galvin demonstrates sympathy for the “puppy nosed things” which people mistreat.

The spring series will continue with an Alumni/Students reading April 17.

Pops to debut

John Williams will make his Providence and New England debut as conductor of the Boston Pops on Monday, April 21, at the Ocean State Theater at 8 p.m.

Williams, who was recently appointed the 19th conductor in the newty-five year history of the Pops, will open the spring series with a program of American music, a good meal, allows you to resolve the dullness of an everyday existence. This reading was even better.

STELLA ARTOIS
THE GREAT TASTE IN EUROPEAN BEER

Stella Artois (Ar-twa) is part of a brewing tradition that began more than 600 years ago in the year 1366. The robust, hearty light lager taste comes from old world brewing that patiently insists that every drop is matured a full 63 days. Today in more than 50,000 bars and restaurants all across the Continent, Europe's discriminating beer drinkers ask for the great taste of Stella Artois. Now you can, too.

This Time—Make it Stella Artois
Then, one of the RASP (Red-heads Are Special People) members told us there were costs for each couple, not each person. I looked at Mitch. He looked at me, when dropped to his mouth. I thought maybe I could use it on alternate breaks. I wasn't worried, we were friends. He respects my body, as well as my mind. Sure. Seven o'clock began to roll around.

Mark: The dance finally began. I don't know about Marie but my stomach was about to take off. All three of Providence's television stations were there and every time a camera would show up, we would try to make the best partner into the spotlight. By the time we reached the floor, Mitch and I had unplugged all of their equipment. There was a good selection of bands: popular music, disco, new wave, and Southern Rock. I remember a couple of them, but after a while, they started to sound the same. The first band, a rock group, had dedicated a Who song to Buddy Cianci. As if by divine Providence, who do you think showed up within a half hour? If you guessed John Paul II, I'd have to say "Wrong!" It was the most right-on group of people he had ever met. OK, Fine. On that note, the band started playing their next number and who do you think was on the drums, playing as if it was a disco song? Margaret Thatcher. WRONG!

Marie: There was one band that had just flown in from New York to dance to. It was new wave. Mitch and I started banging our heads together, then some weirdo told us that we were dancing punk, not new wave. Of course, how silly of me. After two o'clock, no one was allowed in the building, except the dancers and volunteers. During this time, RASP showed silent movies while they played records. There was one incident in the late morning that Mitch had with a bagel.

Marie: We were always supplied with food during our breaks. I have always had a "thing" about bagels. So I grabbed one that had cream cheese on it and headed for the cot. I couldn't finish it, so I put it on the cot and curled up for twenty winks. When I woke up, I couldn't find it, so I just went downtown and started dancing again. Then, all of a sudden, I found it.

Marie: We were dancing, when he said to me, "Marie, I think I found the bagel." I was called that missing bagel from the seat of his pants. I nearly died with laughter. It was one of those incidents where you didn't have to be awake for twenty straight hours to appreciate the humor. The rest of the day went by pretty much uneventful. I was amazed that we had gone as far as we did. Then came the night time.

Marie: It was the last two hours when Marie and I started going crazy. The animal in her was manifesting itself again. When I asked her if we had a ride home, she said, "Don't be silly. We have a bagel." On the next break we ran to the phone, but to no avail. At last ditch effort I called Father Mahoney. The conversation was as follows: "Hello, Dad? Can you pick me up from my thirty minute phones. When I woke up, I went back to wiggle my buns for two hours more.

Marie: We resumed complete lunacy for the last hours. Even if we dropped dead, I don't think we would have been disqualified. In the fifteen minutes we had, but the marathoners were to get off the floor. It was so exciting. The place was pure "Animal House" at the end. We were supposed to leave to catch our ride, but we stayed for a few minutes for the after ceremony. Everyone got certificates. The couple that won the trip to Bermuda was half crippled. Not exhausted, but the guy had a cast on because he had strained ligaments. They raised $3,000. Mitch and I raised $600. I still thought we had done very well. It was the first year that every couple that entered had finished. It was a great way to end it. Both Marie and I had a fantastic time and we plan to do it again. But not until next year.

A look back on a season of success

By Bob Walsh

The first warm breezes of spring have begun to blow through the Providence College campus. Frisbees, softball and baseballs have begun to fill the air as students abandon their winter hibernation and revel into the warm weather. Another spring has come, another winter gone.

There are those who welcome spring as an event that hasn't been seen for a long time. For them the windy, wintry days of January and February melt away from a sharp reality to a dim memory with the first warm breeze of March, a memory best forgotten.

For others, the basketball fans and the hockey fans and all the other devotees of winter sports, spring brings a twinge of regret. Another season, successful or not, has come to fill the air as the Providence College campus.

Youth, rather than being a problem, was the stable core of a strong team. In goal scoring and goalkeeping, the Friars excelled. Once again Cornell ended the Friars' season on a sour note, but that loss should not overshadow their successes. The great moments, beating Minnesota-Duluth, the dramatic comeback victory over UNH and the win at home against BC are no less sweet because of the early end of the season.

The Lady Friars' hockey team was no less successful than the men's squad. Head coach Tom Palamara built one of the finest collegiate women's hockey teams in the country. In his six years as head coach he has changed the Friars' fortunes around dramatically.

The manner in which the Lady Friars won their games this year was even more impressive, to say the least. A 6-2 victory would have been a rather conservative score for this year's team. Scores of 12-1 and 15-0 were the norm rather than the exception.

Kathy Lenahan, Alexis Sgobbo, Mary Ellen Riordan, Connie Richer and many more led the Friars to a strong season. This year's team was supposed to improve on last year's 10-16 record. They did posting an 11-16 record, but that statistic does not tell the entire story.

In some respects they were predictable, losing the games they were supposed to lose and winning the games they were supposed to win. The spirit of the Friars exhibited in these games was what really made their efforts worthwhile.

The Friars pledged themselves to tighter defense and played that way all year. Against Duke, Louisville, and St. John's, the Friars kept themselves in the game against superior talent by playing a strong zone defense and sound fundamental basketball.

Ricky Tucker proved to be a pleasant surprise among an otherwise dismal freshman crop. Rudy Williams was strong again as was Jerry Scott, and Rick Hunger came on strong in the second half of the season.

First year coach Gary Walters did an excellent job with the talent he had. The intensity with which he coaches and his commitment to the team promises future success for the Friars.

The Friars believed in themselves and soon did the rest of the East and the nation. After the slow start, they won seven in a row and rocketed themselves to a second place finish in the ECAC and a fifth place ranking in a national coaches' poll.

The Friars' season on a sour note, but that loss should not overshadow their successes. The great moments, beating Minnesota-Duluth, the dramatic comeback victory over UNH and the win at home against BC are no less sweet because of the early end of the season.

The Lady Friars' hockey team was no less successful than the men's squad. Head coach Tom Palamara built one of the finest collegiate women's hockey teams in the country. In his six years as head coach he has changed the Friars' fortunes around dramatically.

The manner in which the Lady Friars won their games this year was even more impressive, to say the least. A 6-2 victory would have been a rather conservative score for this year's team. Scores of 12-1 and 15-0 were the norm rather than the exception.

Kathy Lenahan, Alexis Sgobbo, Mary Ellen Riordan, Connie Richer and many more led the Friars to a strong season. This year's team was supposed to improve on last year's 10-16 record. They did posting an 11-16 record, but that statistic does not tell the entire story.

In some respects they were predictable, losing the games they were supposed to lose and winning the games they were supposed to win. The spirit of the Friars exhibited in these games was what really made their efforts worthwhile.

ranked in the top ten in the nation and remained in the ranks for the rest of the season.
Three big wins against Northeastern, RPI and Vermont set the stage for an away game against division leader Boston College. Boston College slowed the Friars down to the tune of 4-1. That did not stop the Friars' winning ways as they went on to defeat a tough Yale team away and Clarkson and St. Lawrence back home on a weekend doubleheader.

A high flying Dartmouth team defeated the Friars at home to stop their mini-streak. But four in a row, against Boston University, the University of New Hampshire away, and Princeton and the University of New Hampshire at home saw the Friars clinch a home ice berth for the upcoming playoffs. It was the first time in sixteen years that the Friars would be the hosts. They still had a chance for the best record in the ECAC, but the University of Maine squelched that as they beat PC, 6-5, at home.

The second game against BC was important for the final standings and the Friars wanted to be the best. They defeated the BC Eagles, 6-2. A lost in the final game to Cornell seemed meaningless at that time.

The Friars finished second in the ECAC and had to play Colgate in the playoffs. For two periods it was anyone's game, then five third period goals gave the PC pucksters an 8-3 win. The bubble burst three days later at the Boston Garden to Cornell by the score of 6-5. This game saw Cornell come back from a 5-2 defeat with 19 minutes remaining.

Lyons leads netmen into spring season

This week marks the beginning of the 1980 spring tennis season for the Providence College Friars. Last year’s record was 12-1, and the team is looking towards another very successful campaign.

As the spring season begins and the warm weather ventures back north, there is a flurry of athletic activity all over campus. The women’s lacrosse team has been working long and hard and has midfielder Jeff Quisine while up in Canada.

The impossible dream had suddenly turned into an unforgettable nightmare. A defeat of Clarkson in the consolation game gave the Friars and their fans a flicker of hope. That flicker did not last long as Cornell and Dartmouth were sent to represent the ECAC.

The Friars had the most wins in their history—21. Thanks to Jeff Whibley, Dennis Marlin, Dan Haskins, and Frank Johnson for their four years playing PC hockey.

Lamoriello’s boys: a banner year

By Ron Piocone

The 1979-1980 hockey season was one that surprised many fans and disappointed those same fans. It surprised many because the Friars were not picked to finish in playoff contention. But they finished second in the ECAC behind Boston College. This was surprising to be a rebuilding year for Lou Lamoriello’s young squad. The year was disappointing in the fact that the dream of playing in the Providence Civic Center for the NCAA championship never materialized. The obstacle being the Big Red of Cornell who defeated the Friars, 6-5, in the ECAC semi-finals at the Boston Garden. The hope, the impossible dream of an NCAA flag is still elusive.

The Friars of 79-80 were a young team with only four seniors on the roster. They were young and at the beginning of the season they made lots of mistakes. They lost their first four games and people began to think that it was going to be a long year. But then things quickly turned around. They did win games in a row, including three big wins to capture the Brown Tournament with a 4-2 win over Captain Jeff “Booboo” Whiliser was the most valuable player of the tournament. At this time people all over the country began to take notice of this surprising team. They were

Dan Dillon: Super runner gone unnoticed?

By Kevin Burke

Most students here at Providence College are familiar with cross-country coach Bob Amato’s so-called “Irish Connection” and European runners. However, it was not totally necessary for Amato to travel overseas to find some of the best. He found them right here at PC in Janice Fiore, Sharon Clegg, Mary Cataldo will be as strong in the outdoor team. Senior Janice Fiore will hope­fully carry many of their dual meets.

The Lady Friars open their cross-country Trials in Atlanta, Championships was also among the top runners in America. Still, how many people are aware of Dillon’s great track and cross-country accomplishments? Well, I did not know just how good he was, and I wrote about the sport for the entire fall and winter seasons.

As the Lady Friars compete in many meets, they will be one of the best cross-country runners in America. Still, how many people are aware of Dillon’s great track and cross-country accomplishments? Well, I did not know just how good he was, and I wrote about the sport for the entire fall and winter seasons.

Running with men such as Bill Rodgers and Randy Thomas, he captured a fourth place in the National Cross-country Championships in November. A second place finish to teammate Greg Meyer in the Canadian Cross-country Trials in Atlanta, Dillon found himself with the fastest 3,000 meter time.

My calling Dan Dillon’s 12th place finish in the World Cross-country Championships on March 9 a “fine” performance was indeed the understatement of the year. As mentioned in my last article about the event, it is the most prestigious of all cross-country races in the world. A 12th place against the world’s finest from 30 nations is incredible, especially since this young man is just 22 years old. Acknowledging my own miscalculation of Dillon’s accomplishments, I approached him the other day in a rather apologetic manner. Dillon just has not received the kind of publicity that he rightly deserves. After talking things over with him, he convinced me that an apology was never in order, for Dillon is indeed the epitome of a true competitor.

Lady runners set for competition

By Mary Gibbons

The signs are here! The sun is shining, flowers will soon be blossoming, and PC’s women’s track team is once again practicing in the fresh air in anticipation of their outdoor track season.

After a successful year of "Their strength this year is in the long distance events."

indoor track, the Lady Friars should fare well this spring. This winter saw Providence rise through the ranks of indoor track teams as they had their most successful season yet. With an overall record of 1-3, the Lady Friars fought off such opposition as Colby and Holy Cross. Their greatest victory, however, was a 50-47 win over Dartmouth College.

Nine women competed in the New England’s in which Janice Cataldo placed sixth in the 800. Eight women competed in the Eastern’s, with Sue Ratcliffe leading them with a ninth place finish in the two mile. Maura

McGuire captured a 12th place in the high jump. The relay of Jean Fiore, Sharon Clegg, Mary Codbout, and Chris Headle also placed 12th.

Veteran coach Kathy Cerra is hoping for returning members of the winter track team to lead the outdoor team. Senior Janice Cataldo will be as strong in the half mile as the distance runners. Sue Ratcliffe, Sheila Barry and Gena Mulligan will be successful in the one and two mile events. Sophomore Rory Carmody will be leading the Lady Friars in the discuss and shotput. Sharon Clegg will be top girl in the 400, and freshman Jean Fiore will hope­fully continue her indoor success in sprints and the long jump.

One problem noted by coach Cerra is that with the outdoor season begins, Providence will be on vacation. This may put the Lady Friars slightly behind their opposition for a short time. This made, they should not be such a problem once they are able to practice intensely upon their return.

PC should be most successful in the invitational meets. Their strength this year is in the long distance events, as many girls are returning from a very successful cross-country season. They will
