Classes retain allocations

By Kathy Hansen

At Sunday's Student Congress meeting, Brian Moran, student representative to the Corporation, initiated a proposal to bring last week's resolution, in which classes were allocated $1,000 for each academic year, back on the floor. The purpose of this proposal was made in order to attract riders to alleviate the possibility of abuse of the allocation process. "I'm concerned about the future. There should be some objective guidelines for the allocation process," Moran emphasized. After lengthy debate, the proposal was defeated.

Legal action filed

The families of two of the women who died in the December, 1977 Aquinas Hall fire filed suit against Providence College last Wednesday. October 24, in U.S. District Court.

The suits assert that PC 'negligently failed to maintain Aquinas Hall in a safe and habitable condition.'

Edward Fenney of Taunton, MA, and Edward and Mary Gallagher of Closter, N.J., filed suits on behalf of their daughters, Donna B. Gallagher and Barbara J. Fenney.

Rev. Thomas R. Peterson, O.P., president of the college, Father Walter Heath, director of residence, responded to the suits by stating on the faculty survey, designed to objectively evaluate student opinion of classes and professors, will be held from 10:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. in Slavin Center, and from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. in Raymond Cafe. Congress president Terry Raffinelli, described the registration drive "valuable," and urged all students to register to vote in Providence elections.

Two gatehouses under construction

By Dan Land

Father John A. McMahon, O.P., chairman of the Safety and Security Committee, announced today that there will be gatehouses built at the two main entrances to the campus. Harkins drive will be the site of one and the other will be constructed at the Huxley Ave. access.

"The gatehouses were proposed two years ago but only recently were approved," stated Father McMahon. "It is the only efficient way of controlling traffic flow on campus."

The Harkins drive gatehouse will be manned 16 hours a day, Monday through Friday. All vehicles will be required to stop and state what business they have on campus. Once approved for entry, the guard will open an electronic gate to allow the car to pass. After 10 p.m. the Huxley gate will be the only entrance to the campus. This entrance will be manned 24 hours a day, seven days a week. The Huxley gate, under construction, will control access to both Upper and Lower Campus.

"During the peak traffic hours the gates will be left open," explained Father McMahon.

Scholarships established

By Ed Shea

A scholarship has been set up in a lasting memorial to the ten girls who died almost two years ago in the Aquinas Hall fire. The scholarship will be appropriately titled the Aquinas Memorial Scholarship Fund. It was set up, according to Rev. Thomas R. Peterson, O.P., president of Providence College, "as a gesture to the community, as the presence of the girls, will be remembered for these ten girls."

Ten scholarships, established in the name of the girls, will be awarded annually beginning in the 1980-81 school year. The requirements will be the same as for any other scholarship given by Providence College. "The recipient of the Aquinas Fund will be a person who meets the academic standards of PC, and who also shows a financial need," stated Father Peterson.

A special account has been set up for the Memorial Scholarship. As it stands now, there is approximately $110,000 in the account. Providence College has been the main contributor, by turning over $100,000 of its funds to establish the fund. There was also a $10,000 contribution from an anonymous donor, plus smaller gifts from various donors including Fairfield University and Bryant College.

Father Peterson explained that the college will invest the money with the highest annual yield. The decision to invest the money was made so that the interest will pay for the scholarships each year. In this way the main investment of $100,000 will never be touched. If the scholarship money were not invested, it would be exhausted in a few years.

Providence College decided on a perpetual fund, as Father Peterson stated, "As long as there is a Providence College, there will be an Aquinas Memorial Scholarship Fund."

Anticipation and excitement were prevalent in Rhode Island last Monday with the visit of President Jimmy Carter. The President was in the state to address the Coalition of Northeastern Governors' "energy summit" at the Biltmore Plaza Hotel. He used the occasion to push for Congressional passage of a tough windfall-profits tax, and also called for all Americans to "raise the banner of energy conservation."

The smooth running of the presidential visit, and the conference in general, can be credited in part to the Fitness for the Allocation process," O.P., president of the college, Galligan of Closter, N.J., filed the matter."

"Our nation has become overly dependent on oil. This is a subject of grave importance to us," began the President during his address to 170 political business and labor leaders. He stressed the importance of Congressional passage of a windfall-profits tax, warning that the oil companies could reap "a one trillion dollar giveaway" without immediate Congressional action. He stressed that everyone of you will help me to convince the Congress that an adequate and enforceable windfall-profits tax should be levied on the oil companies to take away a fair share of their profits because that would give us a reserve supply of money to be used for things that are cruelly," stated President Carter.

Conservation emerged as a key theme in the speech. "The best way, the cheapest way, the quickest way to cut down on costs is conservation," Carter said. Every family can help. It is one of the most important and practical challenges that we have ever faced."

"Seemingly optimistic regarding the future, the President concluded, "We need not fear the future. My only plea to you is this: that we not be divided from one another. It may be that the early warnings and the increasing prices that are inevitable in any case have come at a time to reforge our nation's integrity, and to intensify our national resolve."

Following his half hour address, the President was greeted by various community and political leaders. Here he was greeted by various community leaders, in addition to approximately 100 demonstrators. See CARTER, Page 3

Rahde Island, Providence College welcomes Carter
Sprinklers for McVinney

By Donna Bunn

The Providence College Planning Committee, headed by Rev. Thomas J. Peterson, O.P., has involved itself with various reorganization projects in the past, including the in-depth restructuring of the college administration last year. According to Dr. Paul van K. Thompson, vice president of Academic Administration, the committee is presently studying the role of various academic departments and their programs and making recommendations regarding changes and modifications that would be profitable to the department.

The committee will base their recommendations on information obtained through meetings with each individual department, which will include department heads, faculty, and students wishing to contribute. Dr. Thompson becomes directly involved with the procedure because he, as PC's chief academic officer, must review these reports from the deans and department heads. Some of the specific questions the committee will deal with include: budget reviews, the number of students within each department and whether that number has increased or decreased over a four year period (1974-1978), the review of faculty status, including questions of tenure, impending retirement, the research and/or scholarly publications they have contributed to, and how each department is utilizing its faculty resources. The committee will also discuss future plans for each department.

This kind of intense evaluation for each department will take quite a while to complete. According to Dr. Thompson, however, the committee does not intend to wait until the entire review is finished before trying to implement some of the recommendations within the departments. They hope to put their ideas into effect as soon as possible, so as not to prolong the process unnecessarily.

In 1971, the last time a similar overall review was organized, the college Planning Committee established the DWC program and the Foundations of Science requirement. The first coed class was also admitted in 1971.

Dr. Thompson explained that this departmental evaluation of the college Planning Committee is not only one aspect of the committee's work. He also said that the committee itself has no power to put its recommendations into effect, but that any academic policy must first be approved by the Faculty Senate and the Corporation, which is PC's legal governing body.

The BOG is sponsoring an International Beer Fest in upper Slavin on Saturday, November 3, at 5:00 p.m. They plan to feature all kinds of foreign and domestic beers, so come prepared to sample!

"Honesty best policy" resume seminar reveals

By Ned Cummiskey

"What you write on your resume and what you say in an interview should be honest." This was the most important point made last Wednesday afternoon at the Resume and Interview Seminar held in room 203 of Slavin Center.

The seminar, which was offered by the Career Planning Center to assist seniors in their job search, was attended by over 30 students.

The two principal speakers were Fred Staudmyer, a personnel manager of business forms for Thomas R. Peterson, O.P., and Mr. Sol Koffler will be the speakers at the ceremony. A reception will immediately follow.

Staudmyer said that a resume should be a short account of one's work experience, not a complete life history. It should just include the important points.

According to Staudmyer, the first step is to gather pertinent information, and make a rough list. The list should include a complete educational history, work history, participation in any teams or organizations and also any awards or special recognitions received in high school as well as in college.

"Once you have made the list, write down three or four jobs that you might want to try, then cut down the list. Leave out unimportant parts. Then select a format and fill it. But be flexible," said Staudmyer.

The resume should be one page and typed legibly for ease of reading.

NASA sponsors student project

Scientific and professional organizations are being invited to a workshop next month to draw organizations interested in sponsoring student activities in science and technology. The workshop at NASA headquarters will be held in late November, and area college presidents will be invited to attend. The workshop is being coordinated by the Office of External Relations, Technology, Inc., which represents a network of organizations and sponsors.

Student participation in space agency projects has been a continuing effort at NASA. During the Skylab mission in 1973 and 1974, experiments from high school students were flown. One of the most publicized was investigated the effects of weightlessness upon two spiders, Anita and Arabella. Wilson noted that in the 1976 Viking mission to Mars, some 50 or more students were selected from colleges and universities around the country and sent to Pasadena, California to work on the project.

Sergeant Major Ronning honored

By Kathleen Lyons

Wednesday, October 25, 1979, marked an important day for Sergeant Major Lloyd E. Ronning. Sgt. Maj. Ronning, an instructor in Providence's ROTC program, was the recipient of the Meritorious Service Medal. The awards ceremony was conducted by LTC Robert Steipock and attended by more than 100 cadets, cadre, department members and family.

The Meritorious Service Medal is the highest peace time award given to an enlisted person. Sgt. Maj. Ronning received this particular medal and citation for his significant contributions during a 12-month tour in Europe prior to his PC assignment. As the first sergeant for an Infantry Rifle Company, Sgt. Maj. Ronning added to improving morale and combat readiness in an intense training environment.

Sgt. Maj. Ronning has served in the United States Army for 23 years. His tours of duty have carried him to Germany for two tours, Vietnam twice, and numerous assignments throughout the United States. He is presently stationed here at Providence College as an instructor in the ROTC program.

Senator Fortunato fielded questions on various topics. In response to one student's question concerning Senator Fortunato's political future, he stated that he will be announcing his candidacy for the Representative District no. 2 seat, presently held by Eddie Beard.

Resume writing

"Rather than sending out hundreds of resumes, send out twenty-five to places that you would want to work for," said Staudmyer. According to O'Brien, every person should give a lot of thought to the interview before going. One should know something about the company before going to the interview. For instance: the company's size, their yearly sales, number of employees, and opportunities for advancement within the company.

"The person should know what motivates them or what they think will motivate them if they get the job. Whether it is money, prestige, advancement or just the job, every person should know that answer before the interview," said O'Brien.

"The interviewer will try to find out if the candidate has drive and energy, but that isn't easy to find out," said O'Brien. He will also ask what the person wants and expects from the job.

Appearance and poise are important in an interview, but the only way to gain confidence in an interview is to do several interviews.

"The candidate should be honest in the interview. If you don't know the answer to a question, say that you don't. It should also be a process where the candidate learns something about the company as the interviewer learns about the candidate," added O'Brien.

After the interview, the person should thank the interviewer by a letter.

One should also be able to explain information listed on a resume during an interview.

"Remember that you have as much to offer as he does," said O'Brien.

When the applause subsided the President continued, "Peace can only be ours if we are strong. We must pull together in unity, and confidence in one another."

BOG, Advisory Board overstep Constitutional bounds

The Editorial Board of The Cowl feels that if Providence College is going to invest the sum of $5,000,000 in a new center, they should not rule out the possibility of the need for a field house to expand in the future. A good many students, both in and out of student organizations have been polled again in regards to their present ideas on this new field house. As a result, the construction of a field house will be just one of the ways in which the college will do this. For this reason it is necessary that the administration or the student body of Providence College themselves as pan-campus organizations, then a constitutional revision is imperative.

Field House

Careful planning necessary

In light of the recent announce-ment of the green light for the construction of the field house by the Providence College administration, The Cowl feels that if Providence College is going to invest the sum of $5,000,000 in a new center, they should not rule out the possibility of the need for a field house to expand in the future. A good many students, both in and out of student organizations have been polled again in regards to their present ideas on this new field house. As a result, the construction of a field house will be just one of the ways in which the college will do this. For this reason it is necessary that the administration or the student body of Providence College themselves as pan-campus organizations, then a constitutional revision is imperative.

The construction of this structure could prove to be a healthy addition of this new athletic center. The Board of Governors was formed in 1972. Prior to its conception, the Student Congress was the independent entity, rather, it worked in cooperation with the Advisory Board.

It has become apparent to the Editorial Board of The Cowl that the constitution of the "Union Council of the College Union" must be examined in the hopes of clarifying two controversial issues. The first one is that the construction of the "Union Council of the College Union" must be examined in the hopes of clarifying two controversial issues. The first is that the college administration or the student body of Providence College.
Fieldhouse under fire

Dear Editor:

The student body demands and expects quality entertainment at the lowest possible cost to the students. By just re-directing the money, the corporation does not force the students to the lack of adequate indoor living conditions, grades, and frankly, I do not really care if the Providence College community, and the way it was handled by Student Congress didn't solve the problem, but simply rearranged it. It's true the Theatre needs a permanent facility which can buy, or the cost of this entertainment can be charged to students at BOG budget this year, but they must strive to insure that the decision is yours.

In closing, I'd like to point out, the college handbook states that PC "presents its students with opportunities to advance their ability without the cost to the students. From this same student's mailbox, explaining the nature of the audience's reaction and the way it was handled by the students to the best of our knowledge, the corporation acted for Peter Cameron that the corporation does not force the college to allow senile elders to be led to the dogs. If you don't think you are capable of getting there. You may have to listen to deep voices in the hallstone. Boys and girls, thank God we don't have Parietals is a tricky system—perhaps other personal factors led the students to the best of our knowledge, the corporation acted for Peter Cameron that the corporation does not force the college to allow senile elders to be led to the dogs.

Actually, this is a nice way for PC to be delivered to BOG, and not look for direction at all hours of the night or hanging out our windows. Boys and girls, thank God we don't have this statement was directed at us (am I presumptious in assuming that you that that is impossible and really have more students in my smallest budget.)

Can you imagine—students living in those that were chosen for this fieldhouse a trickier system—perhaps other personal factors led the students to the best of our knowledge, the corporation acted for Peter Cameron that the corporation does not force the college to allow senile elders to be led to the dogs. If you don't think you are capable of geting there. You may have to listen to deep voices in the hallstone. Boys and girls, thank God we don't have Parietals is a tricky system—perhaps other personal factors led the students to the best of our knowledge, the corporation acted for Peter Cameron that the corporation does not force the college to allow senile elders to be led to the dogs.

As for the process that is used by William Shakespeare wrote that "enriching its pocketbook," the student body demands and expects quality entertainment at the lowest possible cost to the students. In my answer to the question of the nature of the audience's reaction and the way it was handled by the students to the best of our knowledge, the corporation acted for Peter Cameron that the corporation does not force the college to allow senile elders to be led to the dogs. If you don't think you are capable of getting there. You may have to listen to deep voices in the hallstone. The Albuquerque Dance Theater is a traveling modern dance company comprised of eleven members. On Wednesday, October 24, they performed for PC students in '64 Hall. Their program was a diverse one. The first three acts created a modern dance flavor in which the dancers expressed a feeling of freedom not common to more restricted forms of dance. The last act, "L'Histoire Du Soldat," (The Soldier's Tale), first performed in London in 1920, was well received. Humanistic in approach, it dealt with a soldier and his endeavors with the devil. The Albuquerque Dance Theater's performance was interestingly choreographed and a pleasurable evening for all.

This month's poetry reading featured Lucien Stryk, who read at 8 p.m. in Aquinas Lounge, on October 25. Stryk truly was a feature. Now teaching in Illinois, Stryke has published twenty books, several translations, and has served as a guest speaker in Japan, and a teacher in Iran. Strykes' work draws one into it, not so much as an escape, but as a sharing of experience of viewpoint. The poetry is dramatic, tense, but is far from being melodramatic and sloppy. What Stryke lacks in sentimentality, he makes up for in metric smoothness. Perhaps he avoids triteness through a genuine dislike of vulgarity and roughness. Strykes' poetry is powerful in its solemnity; it borders on the grim. Some of the works read include: "Chekov at nicea," "Siberia," and "Lament for Weldon Keyes." If the imagery of this poetry doesn't get to you, then you simply don't enjoy fine writing.

A good 75¢ pumpkin

The Great Pumpkin lives! The marketing club held their second annual pumpkin sale last week. That's right, those vegetables a la Halloween, the quintessential Jack O' Lanterns, have come to PC. The Marketing Club has found quite a market for them, and according to club president Tom Markey, the fund raiser is a boost to the treasury. Students at PC have found many uses for them. Some carve them (Pumpkinicide), while the more humane prefer to draw on them. There are even those who, if they were not restrained, would eat them in a pie (Pumpkannabobism). Fund raisers like this are a minor activity of the club, the speakers that come to the college are the organization's real reason for being in existence. Yet, that cannot be wholly the case, as Markey pointed out that "what this country needs is a good 75¢ pumpkin."
Gucci, Izod, or Sears?

I can’t keep up with campus fashion. I can not pronounce Ralph Lauren’s name, let alone afford one of his accents. And the pretty attire is not for me. Something about neon colors draws out my skin tone. I’ve tried the Jean Bace-woodstock look; dying old Fruit of the Loom t-shirts lavender of skyblue pink. But then my peers thought I was joining a cult. I am in a complete tizzy.

Before I go anywhere, I call to find out what everyone else is wearing. If the going is going collegiate and I’m levitating, everyone will think I’m a drop-out. And when I do match my hair ribbons to my belt, it’s the Friar’s club, or ROTC, and had them furnish my clothing.

But then my peers thought I was infringing on the right of sound—the beautiful sound of the female gals is strictly a halter woman. When asked what they attributed to the success of their dress code, they didn’t have a clue, even those involved with the Providence College dress code. Look for all, which leaves me dancing by myself. And when I do match my hair ribbons to my belt, it’s the Friar’s club, or ROTC, and had them furnish my clothing.

Artists and artists brought to attention

By Kathy Allen

“We’re trying to bring attention to the arts.” This is the goal of those involved with the Providence College Art Journal according to Debra A. DiFranco and John B. Donahue. DiFranco and Donahue are seniors majoring in Art History and are in charge of this year’s issue.

The exact existence of the Art Journal this year is still in doubt. “Our funds are a part of the Art Department budget. Last year we were allotted $750, but because of the epidemic and the other problems last year, we did not use all of the money given to us. So as of right now, we’re not exactly sure how much we’re going to get. We hope we’ll still receive $750 because although this year we decided to publish only one Art Journal, we hope to make it bigger and better,” DiFranco said. When asked about their publ...

Symphonic Fantastique

Alvaro Cassuto re-defined the meaning of hubris last night as he presented the Rhode Island Philharmonic for the first time under his direction. The new conductor countered one of the most treacherous pitfalls in ensemble playing by successfully opening with a full chord at pianissimo. With that first baton stroke, he stated his own belief in the capability of this orchestra to perform in the professional and technically accurate fashion one expects from a front-rank organization.

Cassuto's other risk venture of the evening revolved around his managing of the complex and occasionally exaggerated "Symphonie Fantastique" by Berlioz. Calling for an enlarged orchestra, with eight tympani, three harps, and Berlioz' own request for 220 players, the music puts additional strain on both the orchestra and conductor. Passages played on counterpoint enlist different rhythmic makings, tone variations are extreme, and the clarity of one section seems to shout its individualism even in the midst of full orchestral sound. All of this the Philharmonic handled exceedingly well. The "Witches Sabbath" fugue leapt with assurance from part to part, tympani exchanges in the "Scaffold" section underlined the visual excitement which is so integral a feature of live concerts, and the English horn, always a temperamental question mark, gave a prima donna performance.

For an opening night, the concert was indeed laden with firsts—the American premiere of Jose Braga Santos' "Symphonic Variations," a new director acknowledged to be among the finest young conductors performing today, the Ocean State theater replacing a thirty-year residence at Veteran's Auditorium, and an exciting pianist not heard here previously and well on his way to major regard (although he should learn to slow down a bit, especially in third movements). An addendum to all this: for those music lovers concerned with instrument as well as player, last night's concerto, the Saint-Saens G Minor, was played not on the oft-maligned Steinway normally leased by the orchestra, but on an Austrian concert grand made by Boesendorfer, about which legend says that "if Steinway is the Cadillac, the Boesendorfer can only be a Rolls." Certainly, the sound qualities are quite different—more overtones in the upper register, a singular clarity within each note when presented alone or in chords, and a sense of almost apartness from orchestra and audience. None of this is detrimental to the quality of sound, it is even somewhat exciting to encounter. But it can be perplexing to an ear more accustomed to Steinways and Baldwins.

My final comment returns to the hubris theme. The continuing worries of acoustical problems at the Ocean State were symbolically flaunted when orchestra president Richard Pretat proudly strode on stage and presented his welcome to the new maestro, sans microphone. A full house of 3200 listeners heard him from side to side.

LIMITED ADMISSION

Presented by the BOG Social Committee
The first training ground for the majority of Marine Corps Officers is college. Commissioning programs in all services require at least a Bachelor's degree, since college is really the first test of one's ability.

There are several paths to a Marine Corps Commission. The most common is the Platoon Leaders Class (PLC). For freshmen and sophomores, Platoon Leaders Class consists of two six-week training sessions at Officer Candidates School, Marine Corps Base, Quantico, Virginia. For juniors, it's one ten-week session. All training takes place in the summer and it is grueling as expected. Travel costs to and from Quantico, meals and textbooks, etc., are furnished free of charge by the government. Candidates are well paid for their time.

During the school year there are no on-campus drills or grooming regulations. Academics are the important thing. An overall "C" average must be maintained. Upon graduation, one is commissioned as a second lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps. Within the PLC program there are two special options, PLC-Law and PLC-Aviation. The Marine Corps needs qualified lawyers. In this program, active duty is postponed until successfully obtaining a law degree and being admitted to the Bar. Meanwhile, one is commissioned and promoted on schedule. Service in the Marine Corps as a legal officer has a big advantage over civilian practice. Important on-your-feet experience early in a legal career is the major advantage. Before most civilians even get out of the research stacks in a law firm, the 1st Lieutenant will have real trial experience under his belt. PLC aviation gives a student a chance to graduate with a commission and actual flying experience before his military flight training begins. After successfully completing all pre-commissioning training, he can get Federal Aviation Administration approved flight instruction.

As in all pre-commissioning programs, Marine Officer Candidates are eligible for $100 per month during the academic year. The only requirement is successful completion of one session at Quantico.

The greatest monetary advantage to the PLC program is that the time the student spends in college is put towards his or her pay grade once commissioned. This is the only commissioning program that has this benefit. It can mean the difference between a starting salary of $12,000 or one of about $16,000. The big question is what are the obligations for this program. PLC members can voluntarily drop out of the program anytime prior to commissioning, that is, graduation. Even if they have gone to summer training he can drop if he so desires. After college, regular PLC members and PLC-Law students have a three year active duty obligation. PLC-Aviation has a five to five and a half year obligation due to the extensive training involved. Women Officer Candidates have a ten week training course, upon successful completion, are offered a commission and a three year tour.

The benefits are numerous. The starting salary of a 2nd Lieutenant who has been in the program since his freshman year is over $15,000, that includes 30 days paid leave per year! Medical care is also provided for the lieutenant and his or her dependents. Besides the numerous material values, you’ve got the pride and excitement of a worthwhile occupation as an officer, a leader of the Marines!
Ruggers drop two close games

The Providence College rugby club has earned itself some credibility.

Three matches remained in the courts. Paula Herbert was in the midst of an intense and controversial match, with every point seemingly endless and every game agonizingly difficult. Paula finally mastered her opponent's psychological warfare and tenacious games, and put the Lady Friars in the lead again. Mary Ann McCoy and Karen O’Connell, playing together for the first time, served and volleyed their way to the fifth game and the match deciding point. Jubilation. Diane DeBlassie and Jane Shockey, still undefeated, were unable to finish their match as darkness became prohibitive.

On Monday, October 29, the Lady Friars traveled to New London to conclude their record breaking season against Connecticut College. Stringing together the longest winning streak in the team's history, seven consecutive matches, the Lady Friars handled the Camels with no problem, sending them home with deflated chances of making it into the tournament, which would have been prohibitive.

On Saturday, October 20, the Friars were foiled in a last minute attempt to score a victory over Trinity. A Pat Leyden try and a Mike Corrigan conversion in the last half were offset by a successful Trinity penalty kick, a try and a conversion. The score stood at 9-6 and a try would have given the Friars at least a 10-9 lead, but time ran out on the Friars with the ball on the one yard line of Trinity.

On Thursday, October 25, the Holy Cross club invaded Raymond Field for a night game against the Friars. A good sized crowd was treated to a close hard hitting game, Marty O’Riordan managed the only Providence score with a try. Holy Cross scored two tries and downed the Friars, 8-4.

Netwomen finish 10-2, win seven straight

The Providence College women's tennis team concluded its season with the best record in the history of the program, ending up with an impressive 10-2 record. After their exciting finish as the Cinderella team in the New England's, they came home to signet a strong Boston College contingent. Boston College is considered to be one of the strongest teams in the area, but the Lady Friars attacked the overconfident Eagles and defeated them in an exciting match, 5-1-3½.

Sue Hubbs was unable to topple Kathy Lynch, but gave it a valiant effort in losing three close sets. Nancy Curtin and Ann Marie Mancini defeated their two surprised opponents easily but the other three singles matches were hard fought.

with him from Sarasota, Florida, where he won All American honors.

In the backcourt, where the Friars had some ballhandling problems last year, four players are returning for action. Junior Jerry Scott is a natural shooter at playing because of his quickness and playmaking talents. The big questions for the Friars are at the center and ballhandling guard spots. With improvements there and the ability of the team to work together, especially defensively, the young Friars hope to begin to turn things around.

They'll have a tough exhibition on November 24 against the Russian Olympic Team before opening up against Stonehill on the 30th. Some big games to look forward to are with Louisville, Purdue and Industrial Classic returnees Duke and Stanford.

Linda Duchaine put her whole game together in the third set and added another win to the Lady Friars scoreboard, giving Providence the lead, 3-1. Sue Hawkins met a girl who was just too strong for her, however, and the score was closed up, 3-2. The doubles team of Codeda and McKeever were overcome by a strong Boston College duo and the Eagles had come back to tie the score, 3-3.

PC basketball
A year of rebuilding, question marks

By Ed Ruhl

Considering all the changes which have occurred in the Providence College basketball program over the last year, the 1979-80 season is a series of questions. How will first-year coach Gary Walters fare as successor of the legendary Dave Gavitt? How can the Friars compete in the new Big East conference, which features the top teams in Eastern basketball? And can the Friars overcome the problems of inexperience and personnel gaps to regain a top name in college basketball?

Due to all these questions, most basketball critics see the Friars chances as slim, which may turn out to be their biggest asset. PC has been picked to finish last in their conference against such competition as Boston College, Connecticut, Seton Hall, St. Johns, Syracuse and Georgetown.

With Hunger's hard work and progress, Aubrey Stallworth will compete with Hunger for the center position, and so far, the sophomore is the surprise of the Friar camp. His positive attitude and improvement over the summer has come as a pleasant surprise to the coaching staff. Bill Fields, the fine shooter who

Friars grab overtime win from Bentley, 3-2...

By Cheryl Gabes

When a PC soccer team with a record of 4-3 enters into a clash with an opponent holding a record of 6-5, what happens? Screaming from the sidelines, tension from the players...and a Friar victory over their challengers, Bentley College.

The first half of the game brought much disappointment to PC fans. At 2:51 of the first period, Steve Baldwin was assisted by teammate Steve Baldwin and gave Bentley a 1-0 lead. The Friars lacked aggressiveness and confidence and fell behind for a halftime score of 1-0.

Neither team displayed a hands-on display of footwork in the beginning of the second half. Both teams fought fervently to control the ball, but too much boggling from both sides prevented any real action. With 20 minutes left to play in the game, Alan Doyle sustained a minor knee injury and was taken off the field.

The second half was uneventful as both teams had their chance to score, but neither could capitalize on their opportunities. A bright spot for the Friars was reserve goalie Steve Eustance, a freshman who made his collegiate debut against the Bruins and managed to stop anything they could shoot at him.

The Friars next game will be at home on Saturday at 1:30 as they take on the Boston University Terriers at Clay Field.

...but get manhandled by Bruins, 4-1

By John Brandalino

Four goals within an eleven minute stretch was the key to Brown University's victory of the Providence College Friars, 4-1, last Friday night at Aldrich-Dexter Field. The win broke Brown's three game losing streak to make their record 5-4, the Friars dropped to 6-5. It was the first game of the Friars since the team was excluded from the first meeting of the teams since 1974.

Brown's Bill Champaigne penetrated the net first at 3:04 to give the Bruins a 1-0 advantage. Teammate Dave Lajoie, assisted by Hugh Copeland, followed suit at 20:37, sliding it past PC goalie Peter Chentette. Brown's Stu Mountain hit at 23:31, assisted again by Copeland. Fifty six seconds later, the Bruins' Tom Gorkin capped Brown's scoring unassisted to make the score 4-0.

The Friar's lone goal came with 3:29 remaining in the first half, when John Murphy infiltrated Brown territory and put the ball past Brown goalie Greg Mikko from the right of the penalty area. Jim Harrigan was credited with the assist.

The Friars defense was out of tune in the first quarter and the Lancers quickly took advantage. During their first possession, they brought the ball into the end zone in the first two plays. The touchdown was scored on a fine 20 yard run by Don Civitarse for the Lancers. After that score Providence started getting things together and held Worcester's tough offense, while giving QB P.J. Kelly a chance to warm up the bench. Rick Condon opened up a hole for Kelly who made his collegiate debut against the Friars and managed to stop anything they could shoot at him.

The Friars came out jumping in the second half, but were a little over anxious. A roughing-the-kicker call and a fumbled punt return gave Worcester three straight sets of downs. A Billy Christianson interception put an end to the Lancers domination of offense for the day. Tom Biga and Bob Landers, both of whom gained most of the yardage gained for the Friars, started to roll.

With the help of tremendous blocking, Biga capped an early fourth quarter drive with a six yard score. Providence lined up as if they were going to kick for the extra point, but the ball was snatched from the holder, Kelly stood up and threw the ball to Landers who hauled it in for a two point conversion. The Friars had a lead they would never give up.

Next time Worcester had the ball, Tony Capuano and Kelly O'Laughlin (who work well together to cause the opposition pain) crushed the Worcester QB to force an interception by Mike Sutanto inside Lancer territory. The running backs took over and four plays later Steve Gallant and Rick Condon opened up a hole big enough for Biga to run for a seven yard touchdown. The kick was good to give the Friars an eight point lead.

The Providence safeties and linebackers showed their talent in the next series of Worcester downs by knocking down three passes and forcing the Lancers to punt. PC picked up the ball at midfield and gained three first downs in six plays. Biga ran the ball in for his third TD of the game and put the game out of reach for the home team.

A short time later, 26 minutes into the half, Mike Moretti, with an assist from John Murphy, scored for PC in an impressive diving play and for the second time PC caught up, but only for a short time, for nine minutes later it was Mike Larkin with another difficult score.

The heat was on and five minutes later, with just five minutes left in the game, PC scored again by teammate Steve Baldwin with another score. Again, it was Mike Moretti with his fancy footwork.

The buzzer sounded, but with a 2-2 tie at the end of regulation, the game was far from over. Both teams failed at any attempt to score in the first ten minute overtime period. A second over­time period was called, and the moment of glory finally came for Alan Doyle and his assistant Billy Lawrence.

Bentley failed to match PC’s score and the Friars held onto a smashing come from behind win, 3-2.
