All Safe After Eaton Street Fire
Displaced Students Relocate to 02908 Club Properties

On the afternoon of Thursday, March 31, multiple firehouses across the city of Providence received a call that a house fire had broken out on Eaton Street. The fire broke out at 33 Eaton St., a house not owned by the 02908 Club and that was not inhabited by Providence College students. Due to the windy weather, the fire quickly spread to the two houses on either side of 33 Eaton St., both of which were inhabited by Providence College students.

In an email to the campus community, College President Father Brian Shanley, O.P., expressed his appreciation to the Providence Fire Department for the quick and effective response. He also expressed his gratitude that all students were safe and uninjured. The College also announced that they would be helping the affected students by providing them with interim housing, clothing, books, and computers.

As the fire began to spread, crowds of Providence College students and local residents swarmed the streets and looked on. Students quickly took to social media, where the incident was documented across the platforms of Snapchat and Twitter. In the hours that followed, the fires had been contained and the Friar family quickly coalesced around the Eaton Street fire; a fundraising effort was soon born.

On the increasingly popular group fundraising site, GoFundMe, Providence College student Elaina Little ’17 created a fund to benefit those displaced by the fire. The GoFundMe titled “PC Student Fire Relief Fund” raised over $11,700 by 232 individual donors in five days.

The College received such a volume of calls from alumni and parents wishing to donate that the Office of Institutional Advancement created an offshoot of the Angel Fund to begin to field the donations they were receiving.

Agape Latte
Series Brews
Reflections on Faith

“Agape” is the Greek word Jesus used in his teachings to mean selfless love for God and for one’s neighbor. The word and the ideas it conveys have been a fundamental part of Christian tradition. Agape is being incorporated on the Providence College campus through a series of events called Agape Latte.

The Agape Latte events feature a series of speakers that describe their experience and understanding of faith. The events are student organized, and a student planning board selects the speakers for each Agape Latte talk. Dean Tiffany Gaffney, who was instrumental in bringing these events to fruition, says the students on the board “identify faculty and staff members in the community who have really inspiring personal stories and who are willing to share themselves and be vulnerable with students.”

Opinion

Set your alarm clocks extra early! Undergraduate course registration has students vying for classes they want.

News 2
Opinion 9
Photo 13
A&E 15
Portfolio 23
Sports 26
A&E

The global architecture industry mourns the loss of Zaha Hadid, whose style has influenced buildings around the world.

Opinion

Page 11
Fulbright Scholarship Grants Students with Grand Opportunity

Kelsy Garland ’16 and Abbey Guerino ’16 Receive Fulbright Grant

by Sarah Gianni ’18
News Staff

STUDENT ACHIEVEMENT

The Fulbright U.S. Student Program is the largest U.S. exchange program offering opportunities for students and young professionals to undertake international graduate study, advanced research, university teaching, and primary and secondary school teaching worldwide. The program currently awards approximately 1,900 grants annually in all fields of study, and operates in more than 140 countries worldwide.

This year, Providence College was proud to award Fulbright English Teaching Assistantship Grants to Kelley Garland ’16 and Abbey Guerino ’16. In addition, Nally Ann Scaturro ’16 and Heloise Dubois ’16 were honored as semi-finalists for this grant. “The Campus Evaluation Committee was impressed by the quality of every student application, as each one was well-conceived and written,” said Chair of the PC Fulbright Review Committee John Margenot III. “In the campus interview each candidate was poised, articulate, focused and highly motivated, and we felt they all would have made fine student ambassadors for the Fulbright program and our culture,” he said.

In order to evaluate each applicant, the campus review committee used specific criteria that wholly assessed the quality of every student application, online application, followed by a national screening committee reviewing each.
Agape: Kless Shares His Experience and Understanding of Faith

Continued from front page

Dean Steven Sears further describes each speaker as "meant to be an ordinary person that one would not realize how much their faith has developed and guided this person into the human being they are today."

The talks are meant to take place in a relaxed, non-academic atmosphere in order to facilitate natural and profound thought processes about life and faith. The coffee served during the events helps to bring about this laid-back atmosphere. Each event starts with a performance and introduction from the student board, and then the featured speaker begins their discussion.

The speaker chosen for the first Agape Latte talk was Richard Kless, associate director of community standards at PC. Kless described the subject of his talk as "coming to grips with life and death," and how he has maintained hope in his faith throughout his life. Speaking to a large crowd of students, Kless described how difficulties in his life have caused him to question his faith, but he continues to "stand on the rock of his faith" and place hope in the message of Jesus. Kless describes his faith as a life-preserver, and says that amid the sea of death, trauma, and disappointment, the sustenance of faith has given him the belief that he will survive and overcome these difficulties.

Kless' powerful talk exemplifies the goal of the Agape Latte events, which Dean Sears describes as "getting us all thinking about our own faith and how we are all one community." Another goal of the talks is to get students to examine and develop their own faith, and Dean Caffney hopes that "hearing about faith experiences of faculty and staff, students will be engaged in a way that opens the door for them to ask questions about their own beliefs." The talks are offered at a crucial time for all students, when they are exploring their beliefs during their college years. They are also offered during the end of the semester, when stress from schoolwork and other responsibilities is rising to a crescendo. The talks work to give students a strong foundation of faith that would help them work through this difficult and crucial time in their lives.

As Kless says, "Faith does not displace these difficulties, but gives perspective and allows one to say 'I can get through this'." The foundation of faith and agape, or selfless love, on the PC campus can be strengthened through the Agape Latte events and the inspirational speakers who are chosen to be featured in them.

More information about Agape Latte and Kless' speech can be found at https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=tkt5_9zZP4.

English Department Hosts Poetry Reading

Kimberly Johnson Shares Her Poetry and Life Stories with PC Community

by Patrick Lovett ’17
News Staff

POETRY READING

On Thursday, March 31, the Providence College Department of English hosted a poetry reading by Kimberly Johnson. Johnson, a renowned poet, literary critic, and translator, read and spoke to students and faculty, giving the audience insight into both her poetry and herself.

Johnson's poems were unique; they played with rhythm and imagery, touched on a variety of interesting—and often random—subjects, and focused largely on the real, tangible world. Johnson explained the impetus for her style later, saying, "I like the world and I want to get dirty in it up to my elbows."

The response to each poem varied as well; particularly blunt and biting poems elicited laughter, whereas passionate ones were followed by quiet and deep reflection. What remained constant, however, was the resonance each poem held, regardless of whether it was funny or somber.

Before each poem, Johnson would relate personal anecdotes, explain the etymology or meaning of a particular word or phrase, or reveal a particular cause she found compelling. This gave audience members a sense of her purpose and topic—insights that likely could not be gained otherwise.

The question and answer period did even more to aid the audience’s understanding. They learned about Johnson’s process, influences, and motivations for writing. Specifically, students asked and learned about Johnson’s musical influences. She revealed, “Music, I think, is what I think I am most going for in my poetry.” Johnson’s influences, even one as fundamental for her as music, are not apparent to readers. Therefore, to hear information like this from Johnson herself is that much more valuable.

Overall, students were happy that they went to the event. Specifically, they seemed pleasantly surprised by Johnson’s style, which they found refreshing and distinctive. “This wasn’t how I was expecting it to be,” said Annie Dumais ’16 about the event. “It turned out to be much funnier.” Fellow students had similarly positive reactions: “I really enjoyed how she merged humorlessness and seriousness,” said Liz Sylvia ’16 following the event, “It gave them [her poems] a lot more impact.”

Johnson’s poetry reading was the most recent in a series of fiction writers that has been hosted by the English Department. The next writer to visit will be Joan Wickersham, who will be reading from her books in the Ruane Great Room on April 7 at 7p.m.
Qatar, Forced Labor, and an Oblivious FIFA

Ahead of the World Cup that is to be held in Qatar in 2022, many workers building stadiums have spoken out about horrific working conditions. Some workers from Southeast Asia are unable to leave the camps. Others are threatened when they complain about working conditions or pay, while some have their passports taken away so that they are unable to leave the country. An estimated 1,200 workers have died since the beginning of construction and governments worldwide have yet to implement global measures against the violation of workers' rights. People in Qatar complain that conditions are similar to those of slavery. One Nepali worker was unable to travel back to Nepal after the earthquake hit and his family was affected. FIFA says that it is taking measures to create better conditions for workers but efforts have yet to be seen. Many critics believe that Qatar should not be allowed to host the World Cup in 2022.

High Sea Level Temperatures Bleach Coral

Following climate talks past this winter break, scientists around the world are becoming increasingly concerned about coral bleaching. Coral bleaching is caused by a sea temperature rise and effectively kills large amounts of coral. Large amounts of coral in Australia's Great Barrier Reef are now bleached and will die within the next months. These reefs are huge, which means that only the top 25 percent are in jeopardy of dying. However, reefs are critical in propagating underwater life as they create a symbiotic relationship with the many types of fish living around. International governments have been inattentive, which frustrates scientists who have been fighting to protect reefs since the 1990s.

FBI Hacks San Bernardino iPhone, But How?

After months of debate over whether Apple should or should not help the FBI hack into the life of San Bernardino’s terrorist, the FBI has announced that it has hacked into the iPhone. Before the FBI opened the phone, they took Apple to court and demanded Apple create backdoor access to the phone. Apple mentioned that the creation of such a software would jeopardize the data of millions of people all around the world. The FBI insisted, but it looks like they have managed to hack into the phone without Apple’s help. As a result, Apple wants to know how the FBI hacked in to it so that any flaws in the security of the iPhone can be revealed. The only unauthorized source from the FBI has told the media that the way they hacked into it has limited applications; it probably does not pose a global threat to people’s information. However, Apple still wants the technology to know how.

Tsunami Alert in Vanuatu

A 6.9 earthquake struck 40 miles northwest of Port-’Gloy, a town in the Sanma province of Vanuatu. All warnings were lifted after a few hours by the Pacific Tsunami Warning Center and the Vanuatu Meteorology and Geo-Hazards Department. Vanuatu lies right on the Pacific Ring of Fire, which surrounds the whole Pacific Basin. The country experiences about two to three large earthquakes a year and several eruptions from volcanoes surrounding the country.
Gretchen Barrett '17: President

Hi, my name is Gretchen Barrett and I am running for the position of president for the Class of 2017. For the past two years I have been the vice president for the Class of 2017, which has truly made me the best possible candidate for this position. I have been the underlying support system for the president-elect the past two years allowing me the ability to share the responsibilities. I understand what needs to be done for the Class of 2017 and I truly know how to make it happen. I am excited for the endless possibilities of next year and all that I can accomplish with the rest of the Student Congress. I ask that you all put your trust in me to make our senior year the best possible. As the centennial class I expect to go above and beyond for every event we put on to make it the 100th year of excellence! Let’s Go Friars!

John Fischer ’17: President

To Whom It May Concern,

I have decided that I will be running for senior class president in the upcoming spring 2016 Student Congress election. I am running for senior class president because I believe that my leadership, organizational, and social skills identify me as one of the best choices for this Student Congress position. My leadership, organizational, and social skills are derived from my position as the acting vice president of Friar Divers, from being the lead researcher for specific studies in my conservation research lab, from being a double major in biology and English, and from my daily interactions with my friends, classmates, and professors. As president, my goal is to lead as a spokesperson for my fellow classmates and to fully invest my time and energy into upholding all presidential responsibilities, which includes making sure that our senior year is our best year at PC. I am confident that I am qualified to take on the responsibilities, and maintain the integrity, of this prestigious position. I am looking forward to my campaign, and I am also looking forward to hopefully, having the opportunity to become the voice of the senior class.

Sincerely,
John Fischer

Caroline Cook ’19: President

As a rising sophomore who is very involved in Congress, I'd like to run for president of the Class of 2019. Coming into Congress as a freshman completely changed my experience at PC for the better, and I couldn’t imagine being a student at Providence College without thinking about Student Congress. As the current treasurer of the Class of 2019, I’ve had the opportunity to work with and establish relationships with other members of Congress and administration and I’ve also acquired experience in working with them. As a member of the Class of 2019 Exec Board, I'd love to continue in the success that is the Class of 2019, and I can’t wait for the years to come! As president, I would love to get more people involved in our class events, like planning Friar Ball and fundraisers for the class. We only have four years in Friartown, and I’d love to make the best of it for our class!

Thank you!!
Caroline Cook

Rachael Minassian ’19: President

I, Rachael A. Minassian, intend to run for second term as president of the Class of 2019. I would like to reoccupy the position because I feel that I did an exceptional job as president in my first term—putting on various fundraisers and events such as a Providence College Croakie sale and a Freshman Fifteen Night for class bonding. I completed all of the duties required of me and then some, and I would like the opportunity to continue doing great things for my class. I hope to improve my leadership and organizational skills throughout the next term, and I hope that I can plan even more fun events for my class with an increased budget and more schedule flexibility. I want to be president for the betterment of my school, my class, and the Friar Family. Nothing means more to me than giving my class the best four years. I would like the opportunity to give back to my family once more.

Thank you!!
Caroline Cook

Reim Aymen Alian ’17: Vice President

My name is Reim Alian and I am running for the position of vice president of the Class of 2017 of the 67th Student Congress of Providence College. Serving on Congress for the last three years as a committee member and as the junior class vice president, I gained invaluable insight on deliberation, advocacy, empathy, and solidarity. I found my voice and passion as I worked alongside dedicated student leaders and representatives. Advocating on the behalf of students whose voices are not always heard is of the utmost importance to me. Empowering others, highlighting strengths, and positively improving weaknesses allows for not only individual growth, but also for the growth of the community.

Fostering healthy and resilient relationships established on mutual trust and compassion between students, faculty, and administration is critical as Providence College seeks to increase diversity and inclusivity. Promoting open dialogue is essential to strengthening the College community. Cooperation and mutual understanding demand an ever-evolving ideology, one that is mutual to be etched in stone. Improvement and reflection are powerful tools in creating a meaningful philosophy dedicated to service and unity.

The Veritas flames may cool and change colors, but it will always simmer with passion.

Sincerely,
Reim Aymen Alian

Jenna Shanley ’18: Vice President

My name is Jenna Shanley and I will be running for the vice president position to represent my junior class. With my experience these past two semesters as a member of the Student Congress, I feel that I am well prepared and knowledgeable to achieve what I want to achieve in this position. My main priority as vice president of my class is to provide a safe environment for my peers. I want to ensure the continuation of the happiness, fun, and care of my class that has been provided currently by myself and the other Class of 2018 officers. If I were to be re-elected, it would be an honor to serve my class again with the intentions of openness to new ideas and a better outlook for the future.

If there are any questions or concerns as I run, please feel free to email me at jshanle1@friars.providence.edu.

Sincerely Yours,
Jenna Shanley

Michael Knight ’18: President

My name is Michael Knight and I am a member of the Class of 2018. I am running for the class president position because I feel as though I can help benefit the class. I have always been a person who wants to lead and this is evident in my extracurricular activities. I am currently on the board of the club basketball team and I am trying to schedule more tournament events and design warm-up jerseys. In high school, I was also the class president for four years and successfully helped my class raise over twenty five thousand dollars. As class president, I want to unite the entire Class of 2018 by hosting more events that everyone would be intrigued by. This could be sports tournaments, guest speakers, or even hosting dances. What I have learned throughout my experiences as a class president is that it is critical to listen to what everyone wants. I want to ask the entire Class of 2018 what their greatest concerns are and to do the best I can to help meet their needs. Although I have not been on the Providence College Student Congress I am intrigued to learn about how everything works and to become friends with everyone on Congress. Although being president is my number one priority I would love to still be on Student Congress if I lose.
Student Congress Executive Letters of Intent Cont.

William Oser ’19: Vice President

My name is William Oser and I am asking for your support to be vice president of the sophomore Class of 2019. I believe that I am an excellent candidate for the 67th student congress class election. Because of my past experiences in high school, such as involvement in student congress, theatre, and being president of a gay-straight alliance, I am well versed in collaborating with, talking to, and understanding people. I love the idea of being able to work with people in order to better the community in which we live. Providence College has become my second home and I want to make this place the best I can while I am here for the next few years. Throughout this year, I have been actively involved in the theatre department, Six Gents, and most recently becoming an Orientation Leader. I am excited to carry out the skills that I am learning and to apply them to this new endeavor. I am prepared and ready to grow as a person by taking on this new challenge.

Sincerely,
William Oser

Katy Nardolillo ’19: Vice President

Hello, my name is Katy Nardolillo and I am running to be the sophomore class vice president for the Class of 2019. I am from Columbia, Maryland and I went to high school at Mount de Sales Academy in Catonsville, Maryland. I participated in Student Congress in high school, serving as the treasurer of my junior and senior class. In addition, I was vice president of the outdoor adventure club and the president of my high school’s chapter of Science National Honors Society. I also served as the vice president of the freshman class here at PC, and it was truly one of the greatest and most influential experiences of my life. If re-elected, I believe being in this position would further enhance my leadership skills and allow me to further help my class. I would describe myself as talkative, friendly, and personable, and I am always looking to talk to new people and learn more about them. I have a lot to contribute to the whole of Student Congress and I would be honored to represent my class against as vice president. I am very passionate and I want what is best for PC. GO FRIARS!

Sincerely,
Katy Nardolillo

Isabella McCann ’19: Vice President

As a rising sophomore on Student Congress I am determined to become the Class of 2019’s vice president. As vice president of my class I will make students’ voices heard. I have so many ideas to improve our class and the whole campus community. I am currently a committee member on student life and would like to take more responsibility and leadership as a sophomore. Student Congress, and more specifically the people on Student Congress, have made my experience at Providence College the best year of my life. I cannot imagine being at PC without Student Congress, and I want to continue the success of the Class of 2019 and only improve next year.

Sincerely,
Isabella McCann

Michael Bartels ’18: Treasurer

Dear Class of 2018, I’m Michael Bartels, and I am running for the honor of class treasurer. Unlike my lengthy congress speeches, I’ll keep this brief; I am the most qualified candidate running for the power and vote over the treasury. As a freshman, I served as the treasurer for St. Joseph Hall and negotiated a process to give residents full control over their own funds. As the History Club President, I served as an interim treasurer, and under my leadership membership increased 600 percent. As a representative, I used the vote you, the people, gave me to push renovations for Aquinas Hall. In coming years, Aquinas may go from worst to first as a dorm, thanks to your generous votes last year.

Now I run again, this time for a higher and more prominent position, and I am ready for the challenge. This year, I will pursue a goal of better publicizing congress, aiming with new legislative pieces to raise student turnout in elections to a minimum of 40%. The first of these pieces is on the floor, right now. Come by Tuesday, April 12, at 5:30 p.m. in Ruane LL05, to see it.

Go Friars,
Mike

Samantha Dever ’19: Treasurer

Hello! My Name is Samantha Dever and I am a current member of the Class of 2018. I am running for treasurer for the 2016-2017 academic year. I feel as though I could be an asset to Student Congress through my experience as Executive President of Resident Hall Association 2015-2016. I am a current member of the student council in high school as student council School Board Representative, and class treasurer. Through these various roles, I have learned how to work effectively as a team member, stay organized, and assist in coordinating events.

I would love the opportunity to join Student Congress to be further involved at Providence College as well as the chance to get to know and support the Class of 2019. Thank you so much for your time.
Fabian Brunner ’19:
Treasurer

I would strongly like to be a part of Student Congress and run for treasurer of Class of 2019. I think I am a well qualified candidate for treasurer because of the foundation I hold. I have interned at a law firm for approximately four years creating a substantial law foundation, furthermore working at a used car dealership which has enhanced my ability on decision-making with money. I believe my well-rounded background would demonstrate to others that I am a valuable candidate.

I intend to help Student Congress construct a budget, I would contribute my thoughts on how I believe to use money most effectively in benefit of the student body and Congress with other treasurers amongst the club.

Sincerely,
Fabian R. Brunner

Kristen Sauer ’17:
Secretary

I would be honored to be re-elected to represent Providence College as the secretary of the Class of 2017 and a member of the 67th Student Congress. I understand the role and impact the Student Congress has on the campus community and the responsibilities it entails, as I have been the Secretary of the class both Freshman and Junior years and a member of the Outreach Committee on Congress sophomore year. As the secretary for the Class of 2017, I will continue to use my strong leadership and organizational skills to facilitate and promote activities that will have a positive impact on the students at PC while also helping to build the bridge of communication between the students and administration.

I am willing to stay focused and committed to the Class of 2017, communicate ideas effectively, make ethical decisions, negotiate as needed for the interest of the cause, and most importantly, stay true to my steadfast values, as I have shown in the past. I want to help my class, the Class of 2017, to be successful this final year at Providence College. With that being said, it would be a privilege for me to continue to serve in this upcoming year, re-elected as the secretary for the Class of 2017.

Sincerely,

Kristen Sauer

Billy Dumais ’17:
Secretary

Dear fellow friends, classmates, and Friartown community,

My name is Billy Dumais, and I am running for the position of secretary for the Class of 2017. As we enter our senior year, we have much to look forward to. With these great entusiasm comes the need for not only strong leaders, but also supportive team members within Student Congress. I am no stranger to challenging leadership roles. From time spent with multiple Campus Ministry organizations, to one of the most up and coming clubs on campus, Friar Divers, I have challenged myself with strong commitments, as well as working in diverse team settings to reach out to others and to serve the community. To attain success for all, one must humble themself so that they may lift up others. As secretary, I will continue to be an agent of change, with new and bright ideas as we enter our final year at Providence College. With your support, as secretary, I will serve as an insightful, supportive team member on Student Congress so that we may prepare for a great year ahead. As Teddy Roosevelt once said: “Nobody cares how much you know, until they know how much you care.”

Sincerely,
Billy Dumais

Elaine Headrick ‘18:
Secretary

I am running for the Class of 2018 secretary because I want to give back to the class that has been so welcoming to me. I transferred into Providence College at the beginning of my sophomore year and I joined Student Congress to get involved in what fellow students are doing to improve the college. Throughout the past two semesters, PC has truly become my home and thanks to Student Congress I feel like a part of the campus community. Being on the Legislative Affairs committee, I have helped facilitate the procedure in which the pieces of legislation are created and presented to the Congress. You may also see the emails I send each Tuesday to inform the school on the current legislation and weekly speakers. This position allowed me to be involved in the process of how the members of the 66th Student Congress help our class and our entire school. As a candidate for the secretary of the Class of 2018, I am committed to keep the same involvement in the events of the class that has been so welcoming to me. I am excited to hopefully take a larger role in the Class of 2018! Go Friars!

Sincerely,

Elaine Headrick

Abby Northgraves ’19:
Secretary

My name is Abby Northgraves, I am a rising sophomore and a psychology major. I intend to run for secretary for the Class of 2019. I am a rising sophomore and a psychology major. I intend to run for secretary for the Class of 2019.

I am simply running to continue to serve in this upcoming year. I have had the opportunity to challenge myself within Friar Divers, I have challenged myself with strong commitments, as well as working in diverse team settings to reach out to others and serve the community. To attain success for all, one must humble themselves so that they may lift up others. As secretary, I will continue to be an agent of change, with new and bright ideas as we enter our final year at Providence College. With your support, as secretary, I will serve as an insightful, supportive team member on Student Congress so that we may prepare for a great year ahead. As Teddy Roosevelt once said: “Nobody cares how much you know, until they know how much you care.”

Sincerely,
Abby Northgraves

Michael Fahy ’19:
Secretary

I am writing to inform you of my interest in running for re-election for secretary to represent the Class of 2019 in the 67th Student Congress.

I am simply running to continue serving my peers and the Providence community.

I am quite experienced in student government. In high school I was a part of our student council for three out of my four years. I was elected to the position of Senator my sophomore and junior years. Senior year I was voted onto the Executive Board and took the position of class secretary. Most notably, though, I currently hold the secretary position on the 66th Student Congress.

I have also been recognized for my work. Each year we give out an award to recognize excellence in leadership and achievement within the council to one member. I won this award all three years I was on the council. At the time of graduation I also received the Service and Loyalty Award for the Class of 2018. I have also been recognized as Congress Member of the Month on the 66th.

It would be an honor to continue to serve my peers in the Class of 2019. Please feel free to contact me at anytime.

Sincerely,
Michael Fahy
2016–2017
CONGRESS EXECUTIVE ELECTION

The Results ARE IN!

President - Andrew Konnerth
Vice President - Phionna-Cayola Claude
Treasurer - Sean Lawler
Secretary - Patrick Rogers

Cast Your Vote:
Go On Sakai to Vote for Your Favorite
Student Congress
Candidates

Tuesday, April 12
Wednesday, April 13

CONGRATULATIONS
to the 2016–2017 BMSA executive board!

President
Pedro Alemán
Vice President
Marcie Mai
Treasurer
Alisia James
Secretary
Olivia Lo
Don’t Let Dialogue Disappear
Collaboration is Better than Competition
by Edward Walrod ’16
Opinion Staff

Student life has never been historically stagnant. University and campus life has always been fluid and a hotbed for difficult conversations that spurred some sort of change in general American thinking and activism. With the radicalization of the right, the splitting of the left along center and more left-wing lines, and the apathy of the disenfranchised, we as a college and as a generation have lost that which is most important to our character as college students—discourse and dialogue.

By this I don’t mean that there is a total absence of discourse, dialogue, or meaningful change/movements. The problem becomes apparent when discussing politics, though. The American right has radicalized along frightening lines with candidates like Ted Cruz and Donald Trump. The American left has fractured into two camps with candidates like Bernie Sanders, Ted Cruz and Donald Trump spout nonsense, and racism runs deep. It becomes impossible to have a conversation about the rationality of their beliefs because they don’t contain any. It seems that the left is in denial about its own fracture. Among its older and younger generations there remains a sharp contrast in who they support. Even within the younger generations who support Sanders, there are talks about how they won’t support Clinton in the general election should she clinch the nomination. The vitriol of the left against Clinton almost matches the hate of the right towards her. Some justified, some not.

But what does it all mean? It means that instead of collaboration it instead becomes “competition.” Instead of collaboration over the parameters and end goals of each view, it has become a competition to stamp out the other view at all costs. Neither side (inter-wing and inter-spectrum) is willing to actually listen to the other side’s end game or goal. This has led to the stark marginalization of views on the campus for movements that work to create difficult dialogues that need to happen.

When movements such as Black Lives Matter arose, those who were not comfortable with its methods of protesting cried foul. Who are we to determine an individual group’s methods of protest? It is hypocritical that we are often fine with dialogues that fall under our status quo and what we feel comfortable with, but as soon as a movement takes an approach that is beyond our status quo or our comfort zone, we suddenly become massive critics of the movements at hand. We fail to engage with the reasons why these groups have shifted tactics and as such we let dialogue up in smoke as we remain indignant about the possibility that such a shift in tactics means that we need to be far more engaged with the needs of such groups in order to spur dialogues for change.

Colleges have traditionally been the hotbed for change and collaboration; ones like ours seem to instead be reflective of the political deadlock that is seen in the larger political system as a whole. Those who would have otherwise engaged have become disillusioned and as a result are resigned to the fate that will be decided by the loudest group. It has thus created a culture of apathy rather than activism.

Make no mistake, though. It is not only the fault of the students. It is the fault of those whom we trust with political power. Their views and vitriol have been so rhetorically negative that not even college activism has been able to penetrate its mist. Instead, their rhetoric has tainted our activism, our modes of change, and our engagement with political dialogue. Let’s reclaim collaborative dialogue instead of seeing each other as competitors.

Collaboration is Better than Competition

Providence Funding Ignores Library
Club Phil Neglected in Shadow of Athletics

Walking through the second floor of Phillips Memorial Library on a Wednesday night during midterms, I searched to find an open table, but was met with a window cube. The library was packed and I had to settle for a shared table in the middle of the “deep quiet zone” and begin the weekly struggle of papers and assignments. After a few minutes of studying, I looked up, distracted by someone on their phone talking loudly and totally oblivious to all the surrounding students who were working. As I went back to studying, only a few minutes later did I hear another student burst out laughing while in deep (and loud) conversation with a friend. As the noise continued I felt as though I was going crazy when I looked directly up at the “deep quiet zone” sign advertising “conversation and music free zone.”

When I left the table of the “deep quiet zone” to find a cramped, wall-facing cubicle in a dark corner of Club Phil, I couldn’t help but ask myself: why is it so hard to actually find a quiet space in the library? Forcing myself to take up the dark cave of a cubicle in Phillips Memorial should not be the only way to ensure a quiet space to get some work done, and finding an empty table at the library during midterm season should not be as hard as it is for students at Providence College.

When you take a step back and look at what sort of campus construction projects the administration is focusing its funding on, it seems as though our library has been relatively ignored. Despite the creation of a new softball field, soccer field, tennis court, parking garage, and track over the past several years (just to name a few), Club Phil has been relatively neglected and is in need of some serious renovations and revamping.

If we are able to spend so much money on improving and expanding the campus’ athletic facilities, why should the library, as the academic center of the entire College, not receive at least some funding for similar improvements? For example, if PC were to fund an expansion of the library, countless improvements could be made for students looking to find a quiet place to study.

A bigger library would be one way to avoid overcrowding during midterms and finals week, and would also make it easier for students to find space to study. Additional space could also allow for additional cubicles to be placed in the library for those students looking to work in quiet. Furthermore, this extra space could hopefully improve the quiet areas of the library—allowing for greater divisions of space between the deep quiet zones and the louder areas where students study.

While Club Phil is a great place to study, I don’t think many would disagree that improvement could be made on this academic center of campus. If the administration were to recognize the possibilities for improvement and expansion of PC’s library in the same way that they do for the athletic centers of campus, we could create much more effective study spaces for PC students.
The Cowl

April 7, 2016

OPINION

10 The Cowl

Why We Should Take School Seriously

Malala Yousafzai’s Inspirational Story

by Kelsey Dass ’18

Opinion Editor

Malala Yousafzai grew up in Pakistan during a time period when one, would we respect it more? “If we were asked to fight for our education rather than just be granted education, nor have my friends. In most of my time with friends, playing sports, going to the beach, when I was in school and I got a few grades that I was not too thrilled about, it only made her voice louder. When I was in school and I got a few grades that I was not too thrilled about, I often complained that I did not like school.” I was giving up on school out of pure frustration; meanwhile, Malala experienced something that almost ended her life and it only made her desire for an education stronger. Not only did she begin to fight for the girls being oppressed in Pakistan, but she also traveled to Africa and fought for girls there and their right to an education. If America did not have a compulsory education system and students were not required by law to receive an education, or if a destructive and violent group of people prohibited the education system, would American students better appreciate how valuable education really is? There is that old saying, “You don’t know what you have until it’s gone,” which I believe proves true, especially in this case. The challenge is, since America will not be changing their laws on compulsory education, how do we get students to truly appreciate the education they have been granted?

Malala Yousafzai won the Nobel Peace Prize in 2014 at the age of 17 “for [her] struggle against the suppression of children and young people and for the right of all children to education.” I believe Malala teaches the perfect lesson: children complaining about not wanting to be in class need to remember that children elsewhere are fighting to be there.

London Town Friar

Travel Wisely

by Carolyn Walsh ’17

Asth. Opinion Editor

STUDY ABROAD

One of the great perks of studying abroad in Europe is that it provides you with the perfect excuse to become the gallivanting, jet-setter you’ve always wanted to be. The close proximity and budget friendly options of the continent make it difficult not to pack your bag and run off to two or three new places for a long weekend. Taking trips outside of your host country is no doubt an important part of the study abroad experience. With a multitude of diverse cultures practically a short plane or train ride away, it would be foolish to not be a bit adventurous and open yourself up to new learning experiences and excitement in new places. However, as I have gone through my semester abroad, I have learned that when it comes to taking trips quality beats quantity.

In the first few weeks of the semester there is a lot of pressure to plan as many trips as as many countries as possible. It is completely understandable for those studying abroad to want to see every city and majestic countryside Europe has to offer, but there is a real downside to over-traveling or trying to hit every destination on a never ending list. Firstly, you have to think of logistics and budget that surely traveling every weekend would break. Also there are actual academic responsibilities that go along with studying abroad! Your professors are not going to care that you are going to Budapest when an assignment is due. Finally, chances are that if you are traveling somewhere new every weekend you might be too drained to absorb every new place.

When planning trips during study abroad it should not be about simply checking off a list and getting the quintessential Instagram snaps to show off to friends and family. Instead you should prioritize the spots that are most important to you and then make the most of your time spent in those places. While I have not gone all over Europe, the trips I have taken were still amazing because I took the time to plan them with friends and I was not just going to “go.” On my trip to Berlin, a city that had fascinated me since high-school history class, it felt truly surreal standing in front of the memorial to the Berlin Wall. It was something that I did not think I would get to do.

Traveling while studying abroad should not be about trying to beat the semester clock and racking up as many stamps on your passport as possible. Rather, slow down and plan to see what matters most to you. The “pinch-me-am-I-dreaming-or-am-I-actually-here?” feeling will be well worth it.

by Kelsey Dass ’18

Opinion Staff

EDUCATION

At the age of 17 I was approaching high school graduation. I often spent many a time with friends, playing sports, going to the beach, when weather permitted, and doing my very best to get out of class. Most seniors in high school get that feeling of “senioritis,” and once it kicks in, it is often impossible to pull students to stay in school for any more than 75 percent of the time. Malala Yousafzai and I are only one year apart in age, yet when she was my age she was not trying to cut out of class; in fact, she was leading the world in the fight for girls to stay in class.

I have never had to worry about losing the opportunity to receive an education, nor have my friends. In fact, I never gave it much thought until I saw the film, He Named Me Malala (2015). After seeing this film I thought, “If we were asked to fight for our education rather than just be granted one, would we respect it more?”

Malala Yousafzai grew up in Pakistan during a time period when the Taliban began prohibiting girls from attending schools. When Malala was only 11 years old, she began her fight for an education that she believed not only she, but all girls deserved. Four years later when the Taliban had enough of what she had to say, she was shot. Malala suffered through multiple surgeries, survived, and was brought to safety in Birmingham, England. When Malala discussed this act of violence in her movie, He Named Me Malala, she said that the Taliban wanted the bullet to silence me,” but it only made her voice louder. When I was in school and I got a few grades that I was not too thrilled about, I often complained that I did not like school.” I was giving up on school out of pure frustration; meanwhile, Malala experienced something that almost ended her life and it only made her desire for an education stronger. Not only did she begin to fight for the girls being oppressed in Pakistan, but she also traveled to Africa and fought for girls there and their right to an education. If America did not have a compulsory education system and students were not required by law to receive an education, or if a destructive and violent group of people prohibited the education system, would American students better appreciate how valuable education really is? There is that old saying, “You don’t know what you have until it’s gone,” which I believe proves true, especially in this case. The challenge is, since America will not be changing their laws on compulsory education, how do we get students to truly appreciate the education they have been granted?

Malala Yousafzai won the Nobel Peace Prize in 2014 at the age of 17 “for [her] struggle against the suppression of children and young people and for the right of all children to education.” I believe Malala teaches the perfect lesson: children complaining about not wanting to be in class need to remember that children elsewhere are fighting to be there.
Students Should Be Allowed More Opportunity To Explore Interests

by Kevin Copp '18
Opinion Staff

The registration process at Providence College causes a colossal amount of stress and worry amongst students. Not only must undergrads schedule meetings with advisors, obtain their registration PIN, and piece together a jigsaw puzzle for a tentative schedule, but they must also do this in addition to normal work and without the guarantee that they will even get into their desired classes.

Clare Rochford '18 experiences little joy thinking about the prospect of battling for a position in a future class. “It’s like The Hunger Games,” she says. Registering for classes has become an unnecessarily complex process and remains unfair in terms of the selection for students.

Imagine a second-semester senior who needs, lacking a single core requirement, only one class outside of their major subject to complete their degree. The senior decides to take a class that will fulfill the requirement. The course the senior chooses is an English course that satisfies a diversity proficiency. The senior does not have to stress because he or she gets to select this class on the first day of registration, before any other student (besides the students who major in English) have a chance to register. This class does not satisfy a particular interest for the senior; it is merely the first class the student found that would fit his or her schedule.

Now picture another student who must register under immense pressure, but only this time the student is a freshman. This student is not an English major but has a personal interest in the subject area. He or she has been eyeing English classes and the one that stands out the most as an exciting, illuminating class for the student is the exact course the senior has casually signed up for. The chances of being able to enroll in the English class as a non-English major may be seriously jeopardized simply because the registration system does not allow for personal interests in a subject area to be rewarded.

Although majors should certainly precede personal interest when it comes to signing up for classes, the ideals of a liberal arts institution should step forward and make themselves known. A student who simply desires to learn, especially at a school that is so humanities-centric, should be able to get into classes that fulfill this desire.

A simple desire to learn is an impracticality in the face of the core requirement for the senior. But what if the student later decides to add an English minor or even switches majors? This impracticality is no longer so impractical. The student's inability to take the class in his freshman year could hinder his possibilities down the line of his academic career. While there is no need for the registration process to undergo a complete overhaul, more leniency should exist in the way students can choose classes. Every student at PC could select a special interest area and fill out a form that allows them consideration for classes in this area that they would otherwise have a much lesser chance of getting into. With this adjustment, a decidedly unequal registration system would become that much more fair.

Stressed Students Need More Time Off
Benefits of The Three-Day Weekend

by Hannah Paxton '19
Opinion Staff

There are five days in a week and only two in a weekend—a rather unfair ratio, particularly for college students who barely have time to breathe because they are drowning in essays, assignments, and projects on a daily basis. We pray for snow days constantly, even when winter is long gone, and we celebrate the rare weeks where we have Monday off because of a holiday or an unexpected snowstorm. Four-day weeks never seem all that difficult to handle. Five-day weeks, on the other hand, seem to drag on forever.

Three-day weekends feel like a blessing, but there are never enough of them. They occur maybe once or twice a semester, which is definitely not a good amount of time for that Civic essay you were not able to start during the week because of everything else going on, or the trip to downtown Providence you were planning with your friends, or for the well-deserved 10 hours of sleep you were planning to get because you didn’t get nearly enough sleep during the week. There just isn’t time for everything when you only have a two-day break every week.

With seven days in a week it seems logical to have most of them dedicated to work or classes and that will always be the case, but there needs to be time for students to take a break of air as well so that we do not completely break under the pressure. However, three days off out of seven seems more suitable and balanced—one day for doing homework, one day for doing something fun, and another day for relaxing.

While it is important to be diligent, it is just as, if not more important, that students are not completely overwhelmed by all the work we have. With so many hours of class and even more hours of homework, it is hard to have time for anything else that is necessary, like a social life or time to rest. We need to be given time to focus on other parts of our lives besides school. As crucial as it is, school should not be treated as though it is everything.

A shorter week would also allow students to have more time to re-energize and this would most likely allow them to better focus when it comes to homework and other academic obligations. With three days off on the weekend, there would be more time to decompress and organize ourselves so that we could better prepare for the week ahead.

A four-day week would be the most beneficial for college students, because it would allow us to improve in all aspects of our lives—studying for classes, spending time with friends, talking to our families, and having time to rest after a long week of class. Three days off on a weekend gives us time to focus on any and all of the above. But most of all, it gives us time in general, which we never seem to have enough of when all we do is stress over our assignments.

PHOTO COURTESY OF TOPBOOKS.BOOKS-SHOP.COM AND SCALENDARQFR.HOL.ES
PHOTO COURTESY OF GCSUNADE.COM
PHOTO COURTESY OF TOPBOOKS.BOOKS-SHOP.COM AND SCALENDARQFR.HOL.ES
Thank You to the Providence Fire Department

by Kathleen McGinty ’16

Editor-in-Chief

EDITOR’S COLUMN

Sitting on the second floor of the library last Thursday, I isolated myself from my phone for a few hours to plug away at a term paper before my 2:30 p.m. class. I mulled over my progress; pleased with it and thankful it was almost time for me to walk over to Feinstein, given the noise in the quiet zone that escalated to a level beyond what is normally tolerated. People were talking about the fire, showing each other Snapchat stories. I figured it was just some viral snap circulating around. Then I stepped outside.

I saw the plumes of smoke billowing in the high winds from behind lower campus and could smell ash in the air. Sensing something was wrong, I pulled up Snapchat on my phone and witnessed what was happening secondhand. I may not have seen the fire on Eaton Street last Thursday, but I certainly felt it. The rest of the day just felt somber. We received the email that, thankfully, all Providence College students were safe and accounted for, but that didn’t seem to ease my thoughts. Knowing the devastation that occurred in what feels like a natural extension of our campus, and only imagining the tragedy felt by campus after the 1957 Aquinas fire, I was shaken up that a fire of such magnitude found its way into our PC bubble.

Yet, likely, like our 19 displaced students, the glue holding the PC bubble together remained unscathed. The College quickly responded by providing on-campus housing and resources to those affected; a GoFundMe page raised over $11,000 for those displaced in just five days; Student Congress arranged for donations to affected families; and last Friday’s Senior Night in McPhail’s. This is a true display of what we mean when we talk of a “Friar family.” Thank you to the Providence Fire Department for their swift response and for protecting this family.

---

Ray Needs More Vegetables

Last month was the season of Lent, which to most Providence College students meant one thing: no meat on Fridays. A simple walk through Ray on a Friday afternoon could give you a sense of how students feel about this rule; comments such as “Oh, no. I forgot it’s Friday” or “Now what am I going to eat?” abound. This reaction to no meat on Fridays was a little disheartening to me. It was sad that we as humans could not go a week without getting our meat fix. I have also noticed that on a natural Lent-day, most of the meals in Ray do contain beef or chicken. For someone who does not eat meat, this feels like a serious lapse. I have nothing against those who choose to eat meat; the problem is that people are so focused on a rule without understanding the environmental and more sustainable benefits of a veggie diet. I am proposing that Ray stop serving meat altogether but simply that more meatless or vegetable-centered dishes be incorporated into the menus. After all, given the quality and condition of some of the dining hall meats, it may be better for everyone to eat greens a little more often.

---

What’s Wrong, Mother Nature?

Does Mother Nature like April Fool’s pranks? I mean, seriously? Why did it SNOW this week? It is April. Why was it then so warm over the past few weeks we have experienced pretty much every kind of weather possible? The only plausible reason I can think of is that some being of a higher nature (with the apparent ability to control the weather) is messing with us all. It would not surprise me if the warm winter was deliberately created just to set up this cruel April Fool’s Day (week?) joke. I say PC should build a climate-controlled dome around the campus so that it is in the 60s and clear year round. That sounds like a better investment than a business school to me.

---

Don’t Complain if You Didn’t Wait

Compared to the drizzle of people interested in Panic! At the Disco or even Nelly last Spring, the wave of students lined up outside the Student Ticket Office for The Chainsmokers felt more like a monsoon. The line stretched the way to Peterson during the first night of ticket sales; 500 tickets out of the 2,000 were sold. While some students were waiting eagerly, others saw the lines from their Snapchat stories and shook their heads. Why would anyone waste their own time waiting in line when you could just get those tickets later? Were they dumb? Did they not know there were 2,000 tickets? Well, the kids waiting knew more than the kids who were making fun, because all of those tickets sold out by that same time the next day. All of the kids who refused to wait in line never even got the chance to leave empty-handed. Despite their lack of effort, these same students insist on complaining that they won’t get to see The Chainsmokers in concert. They say that it isn’t fair, question why BOP isn’t selling more tickets, and question their friends who have tickets to find them another one – those same friends they mocked for waiting in line. You want to be like Kanye? You have to wait in line like the rest of us.

---

The Cowl is a proud member of the Associated Collegiate Press.

PHOTO COURTESY OF A.NNA.COM
TOP LEFT: Students gather together for Café Con Leche as they enjoy coffee and discuss stereotypes in the Latino community, sponsored by OLAS.

TOP RIGHT: Noor Tagouri shares her experience as a Muslim journalist in America while overcoming the cultural stereotypes and barriers, sponsored by Cultural Education and Programming and BMSA Diversity Committee.

BELOW: Students learn about autism and decorate bracelets to raise awareness, sponsored by Student Activities.

ABOVE: Students decorate tumblers and enjoy tacos, sponsored by the Art Club.

BELOW: Students enjoy a tropical themed evening while eating burgers, decorating coconut cups, and participating in a raffle for beach gear, sponsored by BOP.

BOTTOM RIGHT: Students receive t-shirts and prep for Relay for Life, this Friday, April 8, sponsored by Colleges Against Cancer.
What is your favorite food at Alumni?

“Chicken burrito.”
Jeffrey Vasquez ’18

“Chicken parm.”
Kelly Atkinson ’18

“Chicken penne.”
Edward McCarthy ’17, Nick Forti ’17,
Tim Duffy ’17, Ryan FitzPatrick ’17,
and Ryan MacLean ’17

“Pita bread.”
Thomas Aviles ’16

“Chicken parm and meatball sub.”
Matt Mannarino ’18 and Brian Cain ’18

“Fresh french fries.”
Karissa Diaz ’16 and Kimberly Stephenson ’16

“Pizza.”
-Mary Kate and Ashley Olsen

Photos Taken By Kimberly Lezama ’18, Assistant Photo Editor
The Life of an Architect

The Legacy Zaha Hadid Leaves Behind

by Paige Calabrese '18

Influential and groundbreaking architect Dame Zaha Hadid died of a heart attack at age 65 in Miami, Florida on March 31, 2016. Her death, although a blow to the global architecture industry, is particularly hard for other women looking to advance and establish careers in the heavily male-dominated field.

Hadid is best known for her contemporary, avant-garde designs with dramatic angles and curves that can be seen in buildings all over the world—in the Dubai Opera House, the London Aquatics Centre, and the BMW Central Building in Germany. Her style is categorized by geometric shapes, open spaces and planes, and sharp angles representative of the chaos of modern life.

Hadid also worked with famous brands such as Chanel, Adidas, and Swarovski and had several exhibitions and displays at galleries and museums such as the Guggenheim, the Museum of Modern Art, and Design Museum in London.

In 2004, she received the prestigious Pritzker Prize—the architectural equivalent to the Nobel Prize. Hadid was the first woman, as well as the first Muslim, to receive the coveted prize, solidifying her place as a role model and highly influential figure in the industry.

Throughout her career, Hadid faced much opposition and discrimination, having to constantly push past barriers and work harder than most male architects so that her work could receive the same amount of recognition and legitimacy as that of her male counterparts.

After receiving the Pritzker Prize, Hadid was continually asked questions; she was defined not by her work, but by her appearance, personality, and other gender stereotypes. During several interviews Hadid was asked directly if she believed that she truly deserved the Pritzker Prize as well as why her designs did not fit a typically feminine aesthetic.

Despina Stratigakos, an architecture professor and historian, says of Hadid’s death, “Her loss is devastating. You lose heart when you can’t find role models. I worry about how few women architects there are—not just in Pritzker Prizes, but in novels, in films…I worry about my students.”

While in the process of building and designing the Tokyo Olympic stadium in Japan, Hadid was abruptly kicked off the job after several male Japanese architects complained on the grounds of expenses, and the project was promptly handed over to a male Japanese architect who actually continued to build Hadid’s design on a similar budget.

In addition to standing firm in the face of gender criticism and discrimination, Hadid was extremely proud of her Muslim-Arab roots, and although she was a naturalized citizen of the U.K., she always identified as Iraqi.

At the time of her death, 520 West 28th Street, an apartment building in Manhattan she had designed, was being constructed and is expected to be completed soon. Hadid’s work will undoubtedly influence architects across the world for generations to come, as she loved innovation and progress and was never afraid to be daring or to push limits.

To Kill A Mockingbird Takes the Stage

by Elizabeth Jancsy '18

A& E Staff

Theater's production of To Kill A Mockingbird was a truly moving piece. Heading into the theatre on Saturday afternoon with the all-too-familiar story in my head, I thought of old English class lectures and essays. Growing up, I never appreciated the story that was written by Harper Lee, as I felt so detached from it. It was not until I re-read the work that I learned the true importance of this novel—that is, human acceptance and equality.

Trinity Rep’s take on this American classic was unlike anything one would have expected from this play. The theatre is round, meaning that the audience surrounds the actors on the stage, a touch I found to be very effective. Every audience member is immediately taken into the world of the actors, as they not only perform on the ground stage but also in the aisles. Moving around so much between the stage and the aisles means that the set has to be open to a lot of motion. While the props on stage only consist of chairs and a table, the actors use the space in so many different ways, transforming it from a courtroom to a backyard.

What I truly loved about this production was the director’s ability to connect the theme of the play to real life injustices in the world and in the daily lives of the actors. Before the play started, as well as before the intermission and the second act of the play, actors introduced themselves and shared a time in their lives when they either experienced or witnessed acts of social or racial injustice.

From the story of an actress’ struggle with accepting her child’s diagnosis of autism, to an actor’s account of racism and subjection to racial slurs, each story allowed the actors to become vulnerable and leave the audience to feel their pain. This honesty was visible in the actors’ portrayals of their characters as well.

It can be a difficult task to take on roles such as Atticus Finch and Jem Finch because people feel so passionately about the characters they have loved in the novel for so many years. The director’s choice of cast members was very innovative, straying as it did from traditional choices that have been made in the past. Scout, a 16-year-old girl in the original, was played by a middle-aged actress, and her best friend Dill, also a young child, was played by an older male. This did not mean that the characters became older, but rather that they embodied the life of a child, creating a very convincing youthful character.

Thanks to the actors, director, and creative team, I left the theater that afternoon completely inspired by what I had witnessed. It is a gift to watch performers embrace their characters and their gifts and to be able to connect to and teach an audience. In this production of To Kill a Mockingbird, new life is created in an old and well-told tale; it is another unforgettable gift to be able to watch in amazement as an ever-familiar story is turned into a new experience. While the Trinity Repertory Theater’s production of the play may have ended April 3 after a month-long run, one should keep an eye out for other productions, such as the one on Broadway, coming in the 2017-2018 season.
Long Live the Concept Album

by Ryan Charland '18
A&E Staff

MUSIC

Albums as cohesive experiences have taken a downturn since the advent of CDs, MP3s, and music streaming sites like Spotify. When a playlist can be made by plucking songs from hundreds of different albums and artists, the intended messages of those albums get lost in the shuffle. The biggest victim of this albums and artists, the intended messages of those made by plucking songs from hundreds of different downturn since the advent of CDs, MP3s, and music lens. At the center of this controversy, the album gives a sense of open air, freedom, and adventure that shines through wonderfully in the lyrics. David Bowie—Diamond Dogs (1974) Bowie may have been the king of concept albums. This one, coming off the heels of his Ziggy Stardust days, is George Orwell's 1984 as seen through Bowie's glam-rock lens. It is a weird world he presents. "Diamond Dogs" describes the protagonist known as Halloween Jack, the ruined Manhattan he lives in, and the titular group of faceless assassins that pursue him. "1984" and "Big Brother" are love letters to Orwell, and they firmly cement the album as a dystopian masterpiece.

MF Doom—Mm...Food (2004) Long Island rapper MF Doom is no stranger to storytelling in his music (his entire persona is based on the Fantastic Four's Dr. Doom). This one is just what it sounds like: a bunch of songs based on food. Some of the songs match the theme in name only ("Rap Snitch Knishes"), others take it and run with it ("Beef Rap"). But what the album lacks in deep meaning and themes, it makes up for with light-hearted fun (and a healthy serving of silliness).

Sufjan Stevens—Illinois (2005) Every work in Stevens' discography has a story to tell, but this one is the most well known. Each of the 22 songs on Illinois delivers a snapshot of the album's namesake state. From the chilling "John Wayne Gacy, Jr.," to the heartbreaking "Casimir Pulaski Day," to the jubilant "Come On! Feel the Illinoise," the track list is a varied and moving tribute. Its sister album, Michigan, also carries the theme. Stevens planned on releasing an album for each state, but has since abandoned the project. Concept albums are not dead just yet. Recent albums like Childish Gambino's Because the Internet and Kendrick Lamar's To Pimp a Butterfly were critical and commercial smashes. Hopefully, they will give other artists the confidence to bring their stories to life through this once-thriving musical mainstream.

Carpool Karaoke: A New Take on Celebrity Interviews

by Kelly Laske '16
A&E Staff

TELEVISION

With all of the big name hosts of late-night television, it can be challenging to make one's self stand out from the crowd. From Jimmy Fallon to Jimmy Kimmel, it is a competitive time slot to get involved in. Though his show has been on the air for a little over a year, I have recently been seeing shorts from James Corden on my News Feed almost every day. After a little over a year, I have recently been seeing shorts from James Corden, the biggest names in the industry are sitting shotgun alongside Corden. The Late Late Show With James Corden is completely changing the way we watch late night television, and it shows us that some celebrities are normal people just like us.
Ultra Music Festival Takes Miami

by Luiza Alves ’19
A&E Staff
MUSIC

Ultra 2016 has come to a close and yet again, an impressive line up of the year’s hottest electronic and dance DJs were in attendance. Every March, Miami, Florida hosts the Ultra Music Festival (UMF) at Bayfront Park. In addition to the Miami festival, Ultra holds events all over the world, such as ones in Ibiza, Spain; São Paulo, Brazil; Cape Town; and Johannesburg, South Africa to name a few. In 2013, a record 330,000 people attended the festival and for the first time in its history, UMF took place across two consecutive weekends.

Ultra was held from March 18-20, 2016 and it coincides every year with Miami Music Week. About 170,000 artists setting the stage for what is to be expected throughout the year from electronic dance.

Martin Garrix, a 19-year-old EDM star from the Netherlands, closed the first night on the Ultra main stage. This year, Garrix released his 16th single, “Now That I’ve Found You.” He worked with his new label STMPD RCRDS to do so; singers John Martin and Michael Zitron also contributed to the song. Garrix also announced Twitter in late February that his debut album will be arriving this year, and performed a great portion of his album during his one-hour set at Ultra, showcasing unreleased tracks including collaborations with Ed Sheeran and Third Party.

Tiësto, a Dutch DJ and record producer, performed at 7:15 p.m., the coveted sunset slot, on the main stage. He won a Grammy Award for Best Remixed Recording for his remixed version of John Legend’s hit “All of Me” at the 57th Annual Grammy Awards and has been producing music since 1994. Tiësto has also used his label, Musical Freedom Records, to release singles on media such as Soundcloud and Beatport. His most recent single, “Get Down,” is a collaboration with Tony Junior, which was released in late January. Last year, Tiësto also collaborated with The Chainsmokers for their single, “Split (Only U).”

The Chainsmokers, who will be featured at Providence College’s spring concert, are an American duo consisting of Andrew Taggart and Alex Pall. The group, who originated in New York, performed March 19 on the Ultra Worldwide stage. The duo was formed in 2012, and started out by making remixes of Indie artists. Their 2014 single “Selfie” reached number six on the charts. At Ultra, The Chainsmokers performed their latest hit “Don’t Let Me Down” featuring Daya, which reached number four on the U.S. Dance charts, along with unreleased singles coming within this year.

The dates for next year’s Ultra Music Festival have already been announced and will occur March 24-26, and there is no telling what is to come.

Let’s Rave

by Kealy Robertson ’16
A&E Staff
CELEBRITY

Most people look to celebrities for their style inspiration and two young celebrities have taken the world by storm. Kendall and Kylie Jenner are two rising stars in the world of fashion. Growing up in the spotlight has allowed them to develop their own unique styles. They both take risks with every outfit they put on, and those risks definitely pay off.

The sisters are very different, in both their personalities and their go-to outfits, but their independent styles have trend alerts following them. Kendall always seems to go for the comfortable look, “I’m simple, clean, and I don’t like anything too crazy. Every once in awhile, I like to wear something fun and poppy. I’m obsessed with shoes, though...I guess the only rule I follow is that I pick things I love. I don’t follow trends,” Kendall told WhoWhatWear.

She has inspired the sneaker trend by pairing them with every outfit. She rocks leggings, Nike’s, Yeezy’s or Adidas sneakers with crop tops and oversized coats, and proves that you can pair a sneaker with any outfit, and for any occasion. Kylie can make anything look good. She has reignited the tracksuit, making them popular once again in 2016. But her go-to outfit that has taken the fashion world by storm is the over-the-knee boot paired with an oversized coat or mini skirt. And let’s not forget Jenner’s hair and make up trends.

Her new line collection sold out in minutes and her hairstyles have kept trend reporters on their toes, waiting to see what color she will dye her hair next. Jenner is all about bringing an interesting twist to her everyday look. Her style is nothing but extraordinary, something that inspires young girls to be different.

If you love the clothing and accessories that Kendall and Kylie sport on a day-to-day basis, you must check out their clothing collection. The have partnered with PacSun and Nordstrom to debut “Kendall + Kylie.”

The collection features trendy yet affordable outfit options that girls across the world love. The dresses are unique lengths, with statement cutsouts, just like something one of the girls would wear. Kendall and Kylie have definitely been able to turn their styles into an accessible brand for their followers, creating adorable, fashion-forward outfit options, including dresses, rompers, crop-tops and shoes for those who want to take after their look.
HUMAN LIBRARY

Don't judge a book by its cover... Everyone has a story to share.

Wednesday, April 13th
7-9 pm in '64 Hall

Learn about the people behind the stereotypes and labels, or come share your story.

Contact Katharine Comber for more information:
kcomber@friars.providence.edu

Help Wanted

Security Officer for home of PC alumnus
Located in Johnston, off Hartford Ave
15 minutes from PC
Evenings, 15-20 hours a week
Some flexibility on days and hours
$10/hour
Vehicle needed
Easy work, ability to do homework while there
Looking for students throughout the summer as well
Military or law enforcement preferred but not required
To Apply please call/text Gerald
(401)323-6666

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM

April 8-10 & 14-17

Smith Center for the Arts

$5 Student Tickets

Call 401.865.2218
providence.edu/theatre

APRIL IS POETRY MONTH

Come to the Library and be a Squirrel Poet... or an Edgar Allan Poet...

Looking for Off-Campus Housing?
Pier Realty Student Rentals

All Units Are Furnished
Rooms For RENT
3 Bedroom Apartments
Located on Pembroke Ave.
Contact Us Today

401.831.3200
www.RIStudentRentals.com
PierRealtyRentals@gmail.com

Dear Friars,

Take a break and relax! You’re working too hard!
The ARC-PA has granted Accreditation-Provisional status to the Physician Assistant Studies Program sponsored by Johnson & Wales University.

Accreditation-Provisional is an accreditation status granted when the plans and resource allocation, if fully implemented as planned, of a proposed program that has not yet enrolled students appear to demonstrate the program’s ability to meet the ARC-PA Standards or when a program holding Accreditation-Provisional status appears to demonstrate continued progress in complying with the Standards as it prepares for the graduation of the first class (cohort) of students. Accreditation-Provisional does not ensure any subsequent accreditation status. It is limited to no more than five years from matriculation of the first class.

Open House

Date/Time: Wednesday, April 27, 2016
Registration 4:45 p.m.
(Presentation begins promptly at 5 p.m.)
Location: 35 Claverick Street, Providence, R.I.
GPS address: 157 Clifford Street, Providence
RSVP: 401-398-4538, space is limited
jwu.edu/pa

With classes at the School of Continuing Education

Whether you need to make up credits or complete a requirement*, SCE is the convenient, affordable solution.

- Online classes — learn wherever you are
- 1-week and 5-week on-campus classes
- 10-week online classes
- $990 tuition — more affordable than most state colleges
- Classes taught by PC faculty
- No need to transfer credits from other schools

PROVIDENCE.EDU/SUMMER
401.865.2487 | sce@providence.edu

*Students must obtain approval by the Office of the Dean before registering for summer classes.

Come join us for this One-Stop Shopping event!
Free Food and Refreshments!

- Pick up your cap and gown: Be sure that all financial obligations are satisfied with the Office of the Bursar. Account balance information may be viewed on Cyberfriar. Indebtedness to the College will prohibit pick up of your cap & gown. Also, Federal Direct/Perkins Loan recipients must complete an exit counseling session. Information regarding this counseling will be forthcoming from the Student Loan Office. Failure to complete this exit counseling will also prohibit the pickup of your cap & gown.
- Pick up your Senior Packet containing invitations for family and friends and the Student Guide to Commencement, which outlines specific times, locations, etc., to make this a memorable weekend.
- Visit with your classmates.
- Find out who you’ll be sitting next to at Commencement.
- Get your number in line for the Commencement processional.
- Pick up your guest tickets to Commencement.

Attendance is mandatory and a photo ID is required. Please notify the Office of College Events via e-mail at colevent@providence.edu or by phone at ext. 2344 in advance if you are unable to attend.

STAY ON TRACK THIS SUMMER

WITH CLASSES AT THE SCHOOL of CONTINUING EDUCATION

Whether you need to make up credits or complete a requirement*, SCE is the convenient, affordable solution.

- Online classes — learn wherever you are
- 1-week and 5-week on-campus classes
- 10-week online classes
- $990 tuition — more affordable than most state colleges
- Classes taught by PC faculty
- No need to transfer credits from other schools

PROVIDENCE.EDU/SUMMER
401.865.2487 | sce@providence.edu

*Students must obtain approval by the Office of the Dean before registering for summer classes.
Do you love The Cowl as much as we do?

Show us how much! Create an advertisement for The Cowl, send it to us, and you might see it featured...in The Cowl!

Submissions can be sent to:
kmcgint1@friars.providence.edu
gnigro@friars.providence.edu
Dear Friars....

Tune in next issue as we reveal the 2016 Commencement speaker.
If Mesopotamia Is the Cradle of Civilization, Then We’re the Cradle of Journalism.

Apply Today!
The Future is Uncertain
by Matt Farrell '17
Portfolio Staff

Wasteland. Wind blows sand, scratching the man's skin as if an animal attacked. His mind whirls with confusion due to his situation. The man woke up alone, and alone he has remained. The reason is unclear. Nuclear apocalypse? Mass migration? Disease? He wanted anything, just a reason. Staggering under the sun's heartbeat, the man continued on the melting pavement on a familiar highway. Stuck between a rock and a hard place.

As the air sang a harmony with the sunrays, the man gazed into the distance. There must be someone in the city. Regaining his balance, he stumbled toward the horizon, for the city could be a safe house for answers. As he walked the man had to take his mind off the blisters forming on the soles of his feet. I guess I'm not going into work tomorrow, he thought. If I knew this was going to happen maybe I would've had the courage to quit.

The man worked a simple job and, like a lot of you in the workforce, it was a menial one. Day in and day out the man would be the stereotypical employee: get everything done early and be the boss's monkey. For years (who knows how many) the man was at the end of an extended arm accompanied by an index finger, staring him in the face. Late nights in the office and Adderall led to bar nights and whiskey near the end. On the bar stool the man would stare at his glass, more specifically the ice cubes. The ice cubes were suspended in time, floating just above the surface to take in the smoke-filled air. Would I have quit?

The man reached the outskirts when the sun was falling. Welcome to ________! The man read the sign with tired eyes, a familiar feeling. The man pushed the limits of his body, numbed by the time pain was reached. Sustaining himself on an apple he did his job, but after years no rise or fall. The valedictorian now was alone with no one below him. The worker was alone, and no one was above him.

The city was empty. The man yelled, "Hello?" The response was his echo and nothing else. The hairs on the man's arms were standing up as if giving an ovation for his voice. Around were towering skyscrapers, goliaths of the city that dwarfed him. Someone has to be here, he thought. He strolled to the tallest building, the titan that ruled this land of steel deities. Upon entering the building he gazed upon sand-scratched masterpieces in the lobby. Moving across the floor as if he was floating, the man heard nothing. Utter silence was the homeowner, and as its visitor the man followed the rules. Moving across the floor as if he was floating, the man heard nothing. Utter silence was the homeowner, and as its visitor the man followed the rules. He moved past the lobby and to the stairs, seeing "OUT OF ORDER" written across the elevator. A hard push opened the stairwell door. Up one floor the man slowly examined the hallway as if looking for something, if anything. At the end of the hall there was a door cracked open, with light drawing him closer like a fly. The man peeked into the room and saw one light bulb hanging from the ceiling. Squinting, he pulled the chain to extinguish the light, but the chain broke off and the bulb continued to shine. Tossing the chain aside, the man decided to search the room. When on his search, he realized that this room was exactly like his office. Without warning, the memories flooded his brain, drowning him with emotion. A tear rolled down his face.

I'll never be CEO, never President, never anything. My whole life is a waste. Getting coffee, kissing up to superiors, all of it was for nothing. He stumbled to the chair by the window, sat down, and put his nose to his palms. Wiping the tears from his eyes he gazed out the window. Scanning the city he saw something in the dim light. It was another person.

As fast as ever the man sprinted out of the room, down the hall, jumped down the stairs, and out of the building. He turned the corner and saw the figure standing in the remaining light of the day. "Hello there," the man exclaimed as he walked in the figure's direction. "Can you tell me what happened?" The figure did not respond, and stood silently facing away from the man. "Hey? Can you hear me?" The man tapped the figure's shoulder and felt the hard body of the figure. He took two steps to be in the figure's face. "Can you please respond to m—" The figure was a mannequin, with words written in red paint on its chest. "Fooled You!"
We watch as people crowd in through the doors, lining up behind ticket booths like ants on a picnic cloth. We feel our anxiety grow with each passing moment as the seats in the theatre begin to fill up with the talkative throng. Soon, we will be exposed. The blazing lights will fall upon us, and we will spin our story for the first time. Inside, we feel fear, excitement, concern, and panic all at once. We recite our lines to one another, back and forth until we are certain that we have it right. We poke our heads out through the heavy curtains, watching as the seats continue to fill.

As opening night drew nearer, we grew more nervous and more proud at the same time. We knew we were good, but what would the world think? One poor showing, one unenthusiastic audience, and we would be finished. Could we truly please them all? Could we overcome the odds? So many shows fail to impress. Would we be just one more among the masses, or would we rise above? We could make it—win awards, make careers for each other. But first, we must conquer opening night.

The theatre has filled. The crowd waits in anticipation. They do not know what they are about to see, but we will do our best to draw them in, to make them hear our story and love it for its beauty. We owe them a show, and we will give it to them. We whisper a few frenzied well-wishes to each other as the loudspeaker blares, announcing that the show will begin momentarily, and calling our audience to their seats.

When the theatre goes dark, we stop speaking. It all begins now, we think. The deciding moment of our hard work, all of our struggles, our successes, and our failures. It all starts now.

As the lights come up and the curtain rises, we take our parts and though we are not one, deep within us, we still feel that same feeling of fear, even as the story unfolds and we act our way through it.

There they marched. One after the other. Their toes pointed. Their pants wrinkle free. Their shirts pristine. In the air they had their blue umbrellas pointed like rifles. Each one had determined eyes and pouted mouths. Each one was a follower. Each one except for Bradley. The sky was clear, but that wasn’t unusual. It never rained when they went out but that day rain fell down Bradley’s body. He didn’t belong here. He never did. His parents thought he needed this, this treatment. But nothing was wrong with him. He never hurt anyone. He just didn’t belong in the world his parents created. He doesn’t belong in this new one either. He had his own world, one where he was happy. Now he’s just a clone.

The wind picks up. Hands firmly grasp onto wooden handles. All umbrellas stay straight. All umbrellas but Bradley’s. His moves a little. He steps out of the line. Moving bodies come to a halt as the leader turns to the shaking boy.

“Control that umbrella, boy! How can you learn to control your life if you can’t control a thing made of wood and plastic? If you aren’t serious about improving yourself then your journey can end right now. So what will it be? Follow the path to success or make your own?”

One mistake. That’s all it took to get kicked out. But Bradley was scared. Scared of the judging eyes and the smirk covered lips. Scared of being pointed out. He wasn’t a follower, truly. But he was stuck in a trap of perceived perfection. He had no choice, so he followed.
Dear Tiffany and Earl,

I gotta be honest, I’m hitting the wall with this semester—hard.

I’ve slept through my alarm every day this week, I keep having to sit down for a breather on the Guzman Hill, and all of my classes sound like alien languages. My body is literally breaking down—I feel like I have three different colds, and yesterday I even tripped over a puppy and tried to turn in a Disney Princess coloring page to my professor as homework. Is there anything I can do to overcome this hump???

Sleepily and anxiously yours,
The Hobo who Lives on the Struggle Bus

Dear Husk of Old Bones and/or Just Lazy,

I was once a child beauty pageant coach. The contestants I trained needed to be up for 72 hours at a time with a smile in order to have it permanently fixed upon their faces. They needed to be alert to what the judges wanted. Gracefully energetic for the talent portion. Hyper aware of the cosmos around them.

Which is why, after I was arrested by protective services, I realized most were not ready for my secret. But your problem and my role as the child beauty pageant coach of the universe leads me to divulge my secrets. Are you familiar with Honey Boo Boo? If not go look up her “go-go” juice. When I coached her, we gave her a gallon a day and let me tell you, she never lost with that stuff in her.

It’s 8 parts green Mountain Dew, Monster, 8 shots of expresso, 1 cappuccino, 8 cans of Red Bull (legally this was the most anyone one person is allowed to consume in a given setting), 6 Five Hour Energy shots, coffee grinds, 8 tbsp of honey, 7 tbsp of sugar cane extract, 4 parts red Mountain Dew, a strand of hair from a Mormon, 1 cup of stolen holy water (this is the spirit you need), 2 cups of Diet Coke for health reasons. This was legally sorted as a class IV controlled substance due to its magical properties. I promise it will work and give you that small pep in your step you need. Oh, and this is super important: you don’t use a blender for this, you have to hydraulic press it all together.

Now go and win nationals! Live my dream and prove that I am the greatest coach in the world!

DON’T COME HOME UNLESS YOU WIN A TROPHY OR COME BACK ON IT, Coach

Dear Peaked in Middle School,

Seriously? I mean college isn’t that hard...maybe stop going to house parties every night and actually read a book. Although if that’s not the problem, and you actually are sick or whatever, that’s a legit excuse and don’t let anyone tell you otherwise. There’s no shame in sleeping through alarms. It’s either get enough sleep or have, like, an aneurysm in class, and nobody wants that. But seriously, you turned in a coloring book and didn’t get credit for that? What monster of a professor failed to see the beauty of a child’s imagination? That’s the greatest genius of all.

Oh yeah, advice...maybe you should get more exercise and improve your diet? Be generally healthier? Do all your work in a timely manner, and get help from OAS if you need it? I guess that might help.

- Earl, Life Coach

Disclaimer

The Tiffany & Earl feature is a satirized account of Providence College. Both the questions and answers are purely works of fiction. Tiffany & Earl are anti-heroes whose comments ultimately satirize the stereotypes they each represent.
Three years ago, the Big East was considered to be left for the dead. Syracuse, Notre Dame, and Pittsburgh had all departed for the Atlantic Coast Conference, and Louisville would join them a year later. West Virginia left for the Big 12, Rutgers for the Big Ten, and Connecticut for the American Athletic Conference. Skeptics wondered what the conference would look like following the mass exodus; after all, the Big East was widely considered to be the strongest and deepest conference in the country.

The conference, left with seven "basketball-only" schools (Providence, Villanova, St. John’s, Georgetown, Seton Hall, Marquette, and DePaul), acted quickly, adding eight "basketball-only" schools (Georgetown, Xavier, Butler, and Creighton). The result was a new Big East: 10 schools and a manageable 13-game schedule. The conference would be a true test of athletic parity, something that in the conference’s final year, half of the Final Four were Big East members (Louisville and Syracuse). Unfortunately, the new Big East was always going to be compared to the old one. It was "watered-down," "soft," and many other adjectives that diminished the conference’s reputation.

The first year of the new Big East was everything that the skeptics wanted it to be. The conference was top-heavy, with Creighton and Villanova being the only sure-fire top 25 teams all season. Xavier snuck into the NCAA Tournament, and Providence was able to win the conference tournament to secure the conference’s fourth representative in the Big Dance. But no team made it past the first weekend, and the cries reviling the new conference got louder.

The second season did not do much to help either. Villanova, a No. 1 seed, lost in the round of 32. Providence, Georgetown, Xavier and St. John’s all made the tournament as well, but only the Musketeers advanced past the first weekend.

Those who watched and criticized from afar saw only what they believed: the Big East was dead. But those who watched closely always saw a pulse for the conference. In the first two seasons, it was Doug McDermott winning National Player of the Year. It was Villanova’s regular-season successes, Providence’s revival from also-ran to contender, and Xavier’s NCAA Tournament wins. This year, that pulse became a heartbeat loud enough to wake up the country. It was Xavier hovering near the top five all season, Providence and Butler rising into the Top 10, and Seton Hall’s run to the Big East title. Above all else, however, was Villanova’s triumph on Monday night.

When Kris Jenkins’ buzzer beater fell through the net, it sent a clear message: the Big East is back. No longer is it a punchline, for critics to beat up, something that people talk about only in reference to how great it once was. No, the Big East is a force to be reckoned with, the only conference that can say it has the National Champion. But is it not the old Big East, and it will never be. But think twice before you call the Big East dead again.

Three years ago, the Big East was considered to be left for the dead. Syracuse, Notre Dame, and Pittsburgh had departed for the Atlantic Coast Conference, and Louisville would join them a year later. West Virginia left for the Big 12, Rutgers for the Big Ten, and Connecticut for the American Athletic Conference. Skeptics wondered what the conference would look like following the mass exodus; after all, the Big East was considered to be the strongest and deepest conference in the country. It was Xavier's NCAA Tournament victory that finally gained a solid lineup due in large part to having acquired a top of young talent.

Unfortunately, the new Big East was seen as a division with the Texas Rangers and Los Angeles Angels, two teams who should shape up to be very even competition as 2016 gets underway. But why should the Astros come out on top? After years of baseball to be played, the Cubs are finally ready to take that step and head to the World Series.

As the MLB season is now underway, the common question that many try to answer is: which two teams will still be playing come November? There is obviously a lot of baseball to be played from now until then, but it seems that in the National Division, not much has changed atop their power rankings from last year. It seems without question that the Cubs and the Mets are the two best teams in the National League again this year, and this will be the year the Cubs make it to the World Series.

The Cubs have always been the laughingstock of the National League and last year’s season-ending sweep in the NLCS came as a surprise to any true Cubs fan. There are positives to take away from their last postseason, including getting their young team some playoff experience. The Cubs are one of the youngest teams in baseball and were able to win their Divisional Series against their rival, St. Louis. Anyone who knows baseball knows that the Cardinals are no easy opponent, especially when the playoffs roll around. Along with gaining playoff experience, they also added a few veterans to the youthful roster.

During the off-season, the Cubs have added Jason Heyward, John Lackey, and Shane Victorino. All three have been in the league for quite some time now, with Lackey and Victorino having World Series experience under their belt. The great acquisitions only come with one major loss, Starlin Castro. The young shortstop is now with the Yankees, but his backup, Arismendy Alcantara, is a fine fill-in who also played well in some of the playoff games last year. It seems to me that the Cubs are finally ready to take that step and head to the World Series.
Four years ago, Nate Leaman was beginning his second year as Head Coach and the Providence College Men's Hockey Team was in a period of rebuilding. The Friars had won just 14 games in their previous season and had not made the playoffs. There was hope, however, that the group of freshmen who had just joined the squad would be able to help turn things around. Nobody knew it at the time, but these players would change the culture of the program and leave behind an unforgettable legacy.

As Kevin Rooney ’16, Tom Parisi ’16, Mark Jankowski ’16, Nick Saracino ’16, Brandon Taney ’16, Steve McParland ’16, Trevor Mingoa ’16, John Gilmour ’16, and Brooks Behling ’16 get ready to graduate this May, they can look back with tremendous pride on everything they have accomplished in the last four years. Under this group of seniors, (as well as Jon Gillies ’16 and Noel Acciari ’15, who turned pro early), the Friars have won just 14 games, not made the playoffs. There was hope, rebuilding. The Friars had won just 14

Butler took the lead at the bottom of the third, Providence answered the sudden lead with three runs. During the 2015 National Championship season, Tanev finished his Friars career with 35 goals and 42 assists in 149 career games, he notched 12 goals and 43 assists with a +46 rating. He also played an integral part in the 2015 National Championship run as he scored the game winning goal against University of Denver in the regional finals and the tying goal against Boston University in the Championship game.

Kevin Rooney, Parisi’s co-captain, signed an ATO with the Albany Devils of the AHL. Rooney is the first Providence starter and did so with honor. “I’m so proud to be a Friar,” he told the Providence Journal. “These are the best four years of my life. I’m grateful for the opportunity that I was given here, so I’m going to be proud the rest of my life that I came to Providence College.”

Mingoa will continue to play with Rooney as he also signed an ATO with the Albany Devils. In three seasons with the Friars, Mingoa tallied 34 goals and 49 assists, including eight game-winning goals. This is also the second year in a row that he has earned a spot in the Walter Brown Award, which is given to the best American-born college hockey player in New England.

Alternate captain Jankowski and star forward Taney signed NHL deals with the Calgary Flames and Winnipeg Jets, respectively. Jankowski was a first round pick for the Flames in 2012 and since then has scored 43 goals and 67 assists in 148 games with the Flames. Jankowski will likely be joined by John Gilmour, who was also drafted by the Flames. Taney, who is currently on the Jets roster, scored the game-winning goal in the 2015 National Championship game versus Boston University. The fastest skater on the team, Taney finished his Friar career with 35 goals and 42 assists in 149 career games.

Saracino signed an ATO with the Iowa Wild of the AHL, while McParland signed an ATO with the Elmira Jackals, the ECHL affiliate of the Buffalo Sabres. Saracino was the leading scorer of the nine-member senior class for the Friars over four seasons, posting 46 goals and 70 assists in 145 games, and was the 50th member of the program to reach 100 career points. McParland will reunite with former Friar assistant coach and current Jackals head coach, Jamie Russell, who was with the team from 2011-2014.

The difference this group of guys has made is evident throughout Schneider Arena, whether it be in the sold out crowds or in the Championship banner that hangs in the rafters. They put hockey back on the map in Friartown. Leaman told the Providence Journal, “They transformed our program. Those guys, and some of the guys that we lost, (Noel Acciari and Jon Gillies over the summer, too. These guys transformed our program in a lot of ways. Not only with wins on the ice, but we have sold-out games now at home and people thought we could never do that. I know it means a lot to them to be Friars and it’s something to us to carry on what they’ve built and the legacy they have built.”

These guys gave life to a struggling program and will forever have their place in Friar hockey history.

by Lauren Altmeyer ’17

MEN’S HOCKEY

Softball Starts the Season Slow

by Liza Sisk ’19

SPORTS WRITER

The Providence College Women’s Softball Team christened the newly constructed Griffith Field in their home opener on Tuesday, March 29, against the Stags of Fairfield University. Kiki Baldassari ’16 scored the first run for the Friars on the new field. Triggered by a foul ball hit by Nicole Lustrosh ’17, Baldassari stole home, giving the Friars a 1-0 lead. The top of the second inning brought two runs for the Stags. However, a homerun by Danielle Deraney ’16 tied it up at 2-2. After three scoreless innings, Fairfield drove in four runs. Providence’s starting pitcher badly missed matching the Stag’s advance, answering the sudden lead with three runs to end the game at 6-5 in favor of Fairfield University. Megan McClone ’19 started on the mound for the Friars and tallied four strike outs. This game leaves the Friars record at12-15.

Following their home opener, the Friars traveled to Indianapolis, Indiana to take on the Butler University Bulldogs. The Bulldogs are the third ranked team in the Big East Conference, posing a challenge for the 7th ranked Friars. They were scheduled for a double header on Saturday, April 2, and a single game on Sunday, April 3. In the first meeting of Butler and Providence, Butler took the lead at the bottom of the first, driving in three runs. During the top of the third, Providence College graduate student Kelsi Luttrell attempted to decrease the deficit with a pivotal two run homerun to set the score at 3-2 in favor of the Bulldogs. Following Luttrell’s homerun, Butler knocked in another run that advanced the score to 4-2. A hit from Paige Mulry ’18 allowed Nadia Kemp ’17 to score, putting the Friars within one run of the Bulldogs yet again. Butler answered with a run, increasing their lead to the 5-3 final score. Taylor Huntly ’17 pitched the whole game, accumulating four strikeouts.

The second game of the day brought glory for the Friars. Immediately, they jumped to a 1-0 lead. Butler answered right away, tying it up at 1-1. Juliane Rurka ’18 pulled the Friars ahead with a two-run double to secure a 3-1 lead. Butler attempted to claim the lead with a single run at the bottom of the fifth, decreasing the Friars’ lead, yet Baldassari answered with a sacrifice fly driving in Brittny Veler ’18 to secure a 4-2 victory; this advanced their Big East record to 1-1.

The third game of the long weekend left the Friars at the bottom of a 9-1 deficit. The singular point for the Friars was earned by Veler, as she scored on a pass ball. This week left the softball team with a record of 13-17, and 1-4 in the Big East. The team looks forward to a home doubleheader against DePaul University on April 9, at 12 p.m. and 2 p.m. followed by a single game against DePaul on April 10 at 12 p.m.
Dunn and Bentil Headed to the Draft
Friar Stars Will Test NBA Draft Waters

by Max Anderson ’18
Sports Staff

MEN’S BASKETBALL

On March 21, Friar fans received some saddening (but not surprising) news that Kris Dunn ’17RS, point guard for the Friars Men’s Basketball Team and two-time Big East Player of the Year, would be forgoing his last season at Providence College and entering the NBA Draft. Two days later, on March 23, fellow Friar Ben Bentil ’18 also announced that he would enter the NBA Draft. Bentil did so however, without the intent of hiring an agent, meaning Bentil could still end up returning to Providence next year for what would be his junior season.

In years past, the NCAA had set a deadline for basketball players. The deadline, usually in mid-to-late April, marked when athletes would have to finalize their decision to either enter the NBA Draft or return to their respective universities for another season. This year will mark the first time ever that the NCAA has extended the deadline to late May, meaning that collegiate players can now participate in the NBA Draft Combine before having to make a final decision on their playing status. The new rule allows collegiate players to get a better feel for how NBA teams look at them and for their prospects. If players do not like their current position in the draft, they have the option to withdraw their name and return to school for another season of college basketball. Numerous college basketball players, including Bentil, have already taken advantage of the new rule and will test the NBA Draft waters.

Dunn’s decision to enter the draft is one that will tug at Friar fans’ heartstrings, but not one that comes as a surprise. Dunn, a leader in all four seasons that he has been a Friar, has been projected as a lottery pick for two years now and, after another stellar season in which he replicated his numbers from last season, it seemed all but guaranteed that he would enter the upcoming draft. It would be a shock if Dunn, currently projected by ESPN’s Chad Ford as the seventh best prospect in the upcoming draft, was not taken in the top ten of this year’s draft. Dunn’s incredible knack for not only scoring and passing, but for rebounding and playing defense as well, has many scouts believing he could potentially turn into a Russell Westbrook type of player for whichever team is lucky enough to draft him.

As the season wound down, it also became clear that Dunn’s teammate and fellow Friar, Bentil, would also likely put his name into the NBA Draft hat as well. Bentil burst onto the national scene this year, putting up stellar numbers of 21.1 PPG and 7.7 RPG. Bentil, whom many draft experts keep off of their boards at the start of the year, has skyrocketed all the way to number twenty-seven on Chad Ford’s big board, putting him in the first round discussion. While teams love Bentil’s blend of scoring and rebounding, some scouts are worried that at six feet nine inches, he may be undersized for his position. However, as other scouts claim, in a league that is establishing “small ball” as the main style of play, Bentil could be a perfect fit and a significant contributor to a team in the NBA.

Bentil returning to PC would significantly help the Friars in their quest for a fourth straight NCAA tournament appearance, especially with Dunn already exiting. However, if Bentil excels at the NBA Draft Combine, he could transform from “fringe” first rounder, to “lock” first rounder. If this happens, PC would not only be looking at replacing two of the greatest players in school history, but two of the biggest leaders in the locker room as well.

Lacrosse Riding Season High Four Game Win Streak

by Chris McCormack ’18
Sports Staff

MEN’S LACROSSE

On Saturday, April 2, the Providence College Men’s Lacrosse Team took on the St. John’s University Red Storm in the Big East Opener. For the first time in program history, the Friars were able to defeat St. John’s 15-10. Things got off to a slow start at St. John’s quickly went up 3-0. Will Mazzone ’16 helped to quickly lead the Friars back into it by assisting on the first goal to Nick Hatzipetkoulis ’19 making the score 3-1 at the 5:49 mark. About a minute later, Mazzone was back on the offensive side, this time scoring off an assist from Brenden Kearns ’19. The first quarter ended with the Friars trailing 3-2.

The equalizer came in the second quarter, again on an assist from Kearns to Mazzone and the game was quickly knotted up at 3. The tie would not last, as the Red Storm quickly scored two unanswered goals that made it 5-3. Mazzone answered by making it 5-4 at the 4:39 mark and earning his fourth hat trick of the season. Keenan Assaraf ’17 also got in on the scoring in the second quarter by tying the game at 5-5 just under the 3:00 mark. Mazzone scored again to help the Friars take the lead 6-5, which would be the score at halftime.

The Friars were able to score first in the third quarter with a goal from Nolan Fillet ’16, making it 7-5. After the Red Storm cut the lead down to one, Assaraf notched his second goal of the game at the 8:55 mark. This would be the score until the last 20 seconds of the third quarter, when the Friars were able to score two more goals. One came from the stick of Michael Peretine ’16, and the other was Mazzone’s fifth goal of the game. Peretine’s goal gave him eight consecutive games with at least one goal. The Friars would go into the fourth quarter with a comfortable 10-6 lead.

The Friars did not look back after the third quarter. They would continue to increase their lead quickly into the fourth, as they were able to score two unanswered goals in the first minute. Connor Byrne ’18 scored the first of the fourth quarter just 13 seconds into the quarter. Assaraf got in on the fun about 30 seconds later with his third goal of the game, and the Friars led 12-6. After St. John’s ended the Friars’ goal streak at the 11:41 mark, the Friars came back and scored with Kearns’ goal, assisted by Mazzone. About a minute later, Mazzone notched another goal, making it his sixth of the game— and the other was Mazzone’s fifth goal of the game. Peretine’s goal gave him eight consecutive games with at least one goal. The Friars would go into the fourth quarter with a comfortable 10-6 lead.

The Friars did not look back after the third quarter. They would continue to increase their lead quickly into the fourth, as they were able to score two unanswered goals in the first minute. Connor Byrne ’18 scored the first of the fourth quarter just 13 seconds into the quarter. Assaraf got in on the fun about 30 seconds later with his third goal of the game, and the Friars led 12-6. After St. John’s ended the Friars’ goal streak at the 11:41 mark, the Friars came back and scored with Kearns’ goal, assisted by Mazzone. About a minute later, Mazzone notched another goal, making it his sixth of the game— and the other was Mazzone’s fifth goal of the game. Peretine’s goal gave him eight consecutive games with at least one goal. The Friars would go into the fourth quarter with a comfortable 10-6 lead.

The Friars did not look back after the third quarter. They would continue to increase their lead quickly into the fourth, as they were able to score two unanswered goals in the first minute. Connor Byrne ’18 scored the first of the fourth quarter just 13 seconds into the quarter. Assaraf got in on the fun about 30 seconds later with his third goal of the game, and the Friars led 12-6. After St. John’s ended the Friars’ goal streak at the 11:41 mark, the Friars came back and scored with Kearns’ goal, assisted by Mazzone. About a minute later, Mazzone notched another goal, making it his sixth of the game— and the other was Mazzone’s fifth goal of the game. Peretine’s goal gave him eight consecutive games with at least one goal. The Friars would go into the fourth quarter with a comfortable 10-6 lead.

The Friars did not look back after the third quarter. They would continue to increase their lead quickly into the fourth, as they were able to score two unanswered goals in the first minute. Connor Byrne ’18 scored the first of the fourth quarter just 13 seconds into the quarter. Assaraf got in on the fun about 30 seconds later with his third goal of the game, and the Friars led 12-6. After St. John’s ended the Friars’ goal streak at the 11:41 mark, the Friars came back and scored with Kearns’ goal, assisted by Mazzone. About a minute later, Mazzone notched another goal, making it his sixth of the game— and the other was Mazzone’s fifth goal of the game. Peretine’s goal gave him eight consecutive games with at least one goal. The Friars would go into the fourth quarter with a comfortable 10-6 lead.

The Friars did not look back after the third quarter. They would continue to increase their lead quickly into the fourth, as they were able to score two unanswered goals in the first minute. Connor Byrne ’18 scored the first of the fourth quarter just 13 seconds into the quarter. Assaraf got in on the fun about 30 seconds later with his third goal of the game, and the Friars led 12-6. After St. John’s ended the Friars’ goal streak at the 11:41 mark, the Friars came back and scored with Kearns’ goal, assisted by Mazzone. About a minute later, Mazzone notched another goal, making it his sixth of the game— and the other was Mazzone’s fifth goal of the game. Peretine’s goal gave him eight consecutive games with at least one goal. The Friars would go into the fourth quarter with a comfortable 10-6 lead.

The Friars did not look back after the third quarter. They would continue to increase their lead quickly into the fourth, as they were able to score two unanswered goals in the first minute. Connor Byrne ’18 scored the first of the fourth quarter just 13 seconds into the quarter. Assaraf got in on the fun about 30 seconds later with his third goal of the game, and the Friars led 12-6. After St. John’s ended the Friars’ goal streak at the 11:41 mark, the Friars came back and scored with Kearns’ goal, assisted by Mazzone. About a minute later, Mazzone notched another goal, making it his sixth of the game— and the other was Mazzone’s fifth goal of the game. Peretine’s goal gave him eight consecutive games with at least one goal. The Friars would go into the fourth quarter with a comfortable 10-6 lead.

The Friars did not look back after the third quarter. They would continue to increase their lead quickly into the fourth, as they were able to score two unanswered goals in the first minute. Connor Byrne ’18 scored the first of the fourth quarter just 13 seconds into the quarter. Assaraf got in on the fun about 30 seconds later with his third goal of the game, and the Friars led 12-6. After St. John’s ended the Friars’ goal streak at the 11:41 mark, the Friars came back and scored with Kearns’ goal, assisted by Mazzone. About a minute later, Mazzone notched another goal, making it his sixth of the game— and the other was Mazzone’s fifth goal of the game. Peretine’s goal gave him eight consecutive games with at least one goal. The Friars would go into the fourth quarter with a comfortable 10-6 lead.