Elmhurst Serial Rapist Arrested

by Bridget Hughes '96

Has the PC community been taken over by crime? Last Wednesday Craig K. Garnetto, 21, was arrested on charges of three sexual assaults in the Elmhurst neighborhood. He was hiding in the bushes near Douglas Avenue when a neighbor spotted him.

Garnetto's fingerprints identified him as the person responsible for sexual assaults in homes on Tappan Street on June 21, Dante Street on September 12 and Pembroke Avenue last week. In each case, Garnetto climbed through a bedroom window by cutting through the screen. He usually wore a mask or a hood and carried a weapon.

Garnetto has been charged with three counts of first-degree sexual assault and burglary. He also has been charged with possessio...
Housing Headache

The fifth week of our academic year not only brings the hassles of planning the JRW for some, but also the headache of housing for all. The Apartment Selection Process is already underway for sophomores and juniors alike. Many, if not all of us, are familiar with this imposible process. The confusion, anger, long lines and general unhappiness are felt by all. In light of this the Apartment Complex Office, along with Fr. McPhail's Office and Student Congress have taken steps to avoid the problems of the past.

"The apartment selection process has changed significantly" says Apartment Complex Director Christine M. Goyette. "Hopefully, these changes will expedite the process and make it run more smoothly."

Members of the class of 1996 are free to sign off campus leases at their convenience. However, this is not the case for members of the class of 1997. Sophomores are required to wait until January 18, 1995 before they will be permitted to sign off-campus leases. All on-campus apartments must be filled before members of the class of 1997 are allowed to move off-campus.

If the case arises that there are open on-campus apartments and an abundance of sophomores who want to move off; there will be an On-Campus Lottery. Sophomore's names will be placed in a lottery, and if their names are chosen they will be required to live on-campus. As a result, members of the class of 1997 cannot sign leases until after the Apartment Selection Process is over; January 18, 1995. "If students sign leases and are chosen to live on-campus, they will be held responsible for both agreements," said Goyette.

There will be two types of applications available October 31, 1994. Squatter applications for those students who wish to remain in their current apartments will be due November 13, 1994. General applications will be due November 18, 1994. Students will be required to list their first five preferences for apartments. And they will be allocated by the Apartment Complex Staff on a first come, first served basis, members of the class of 1996 receiving seniority.

"Harvestfest. Tickets were four dollars, and there was more food, more dancing, an authentic German band, and the Rhode Island Orchestra. Peterson became the event's new home in 1989. Also, theme areas were added to the night that year such as "Old Heidelberg" and "Italian Caffina." As of last year the "over 21" night was a fifteen dollar tradition. Before the 1993 night, its elimination was suggested for reasons of alcohol abuse and disruption to the community, but the event was defended by Fr. Cunningham. The Alumni Office hopes the new design will be the hook to attract not only the younger alumni, but the majority of graduates. Also, the length of the weekend will allow those traveling over a long distance more of a chance to stay over in the city.

Kathleen Maddox is optimistic. "As far as I'm concerned, it will be continued as long as possible," she said.

Lyons New Athletic Liaison

by Erin Flesor ‘96
News Writer

On August 15, Bridge Lyons, Academic Advisor for PC Student Athletes moved into her new office in Alumni Hall, which was only two and a half weeks before the first day of classes. Lyons had a lot to prepare. She reviewed student files and transcripts, met with coaches and faculty and oriented herself with the college.

Before coming to Providence College, Lyons worked at the University of New Hampshire as the first student-athlete support services coordinator there. She supervised services to student-athletes, as opposed to PC’s 300 athletes. It was the same type of job that she now holds, except that the position is not a new one here at PC. For the past ten years, “support services for students to see if they’re doing well at PC, but this year they’re taking a new shape,” Lyons explained. Lyons was hired by Administrative Services, not the Athletic Department. Her supervisor and mentor is Dr. Owen Legue, who is responsible to Sally Thibodeau, Assistant Athletic Director.

Although Lyons does not work directly with the Athletic Department, she works directly with student-athletes and must therefore keep the lines of communication open. She works with the open Athletic Department. “I am a liaison between athletics and academics,” she said. Lyons commented that so far the coaches seem very receptive to the new position and function in athletics, and admits that her position, “can’t be successful without the support and backing of the people in athletics.” Lyons meets with the Athletic Director, the coaches, the Faculty Representative, and the Compliance Officer on a regular basis.

This way, “questions and difficulties are fresh in the athlete’s head.” In the past, tutoring was done at night after athletes had practiced all day.

Support services for student-athletes with personal needs are also taken care of by Lyons. She refers athletes to childcare centers, counselors, and academic advisors. Lyons is also responsible for making sure that student-athletes are aware of NCAA rules regarding athletics.

As a new student-athlete at the college, before referring any student, she meets with him/her so that she can understand the specific needs of that individual. This year, all tutoring is handled by academic services. This way, both the Athletic Department and Academic Services aren’t hiring tutors. Also, athletics will be tutored during the day this year. Lyons is pleased with this change.

The program’s courses provide a broad appeal to different environmental topics. One required course, the environmental studies experience, provides a summarization of all course aspects. This unique course allows for the student to theorize an environmental problem and to provide a solution for it. This study experience course has even won the support of the Rhode Island Department of Environmental Management.

The parietal system here at Providence College has recently been modified for Raymond Hall. Our system has been transformed from somewhat liberal to highly comprehensive. Since the beginning of our school year, there has been a fair amount of confusion over Raymond’s new system of visitation. According to Raymond Hall resident Julia Camarodo ’97, residents of both sexes are required to sign-in visitors.

Specifically, what has changed is the security. All residents must explain visitors, meaning that if a female student is expecting a female visitor, she must sign her in, and vice versa for men. Furthermore, all visitors must exit the building at the end of parietals (12 a.m. Sunday through Saturday and 2 a.m. Friday and Saturday) regardless of gender. Residents must acquire a "visitor pass" for any visitors spending the night. Moreover, when entering their own residence hall, students must pass through the security desk in order to be allowed upstairs.

According to Dr. Leonard Roberts, Director of Residence Life, the reason for this area being straightfor-ward. "Until the end of August, Raymond Hall had a parietal dorm. However, by this time it also became clear that we need to be somewhat liberal to highly comprehensive. Since the beginning of our school year, there has been a fair amount of confusion over Raymond’s new system of visitation. According to Raymond Hall resident Julia Camarodo ’97, residents of both sexes are required to sign-in visitors.

Unfortunately, this change created a dilemma for Residence Life. "In order to guarantee that the wants of the parents were satisfied, security for both men and women needed to be insured," said Roberts.

However, many students have qualms regarding these recent changes. "With the recent overwhelming positive steps Providence College has made with regard to co-housing, it is a shame we take steps back, a conservative move," said Mike Quinn ’95.

This new policy will be reviewed by Dr. Roberts, the Raymond Hall Executive Director, and President of the Residence Hall Association. Following this meeting, "Residents will take place within the campus parietal system in all residence halls," possible with all residence halls.

Kushner Shakes Up RI

by Theresa Eds ’96

As the audience of around twenty student-athletes entered Moore Hall on Wednesday, September 28 they were immediately greeted with a hand shake from the evening’s speaker. The occasion was in the presence of history being made in Rhode Island. They were gathered to hear Linda Kushner. She is not just the only woman running for U.S. senator in RI, or one of the three women running nationally, but the top of the Democratic ticket in RI.

It only takes 200,000 votes that Kushner estimates optimistically. "One vote can make a difference." If elected, Kushner will be the first female senator RI has ever had. She is not new to the area, though. She has taught History and English in RI’s public school system, she has practiced law in Providence focusing on family law, and has been a vocal women’s rights advocate. "As a lawyer, she’s proud of. "If I’m elected, women are becoming a dominant force in politics," said Linda Kushner, ’96, and the head of the PC Democrats.

The energetic Kushner stresses that it is important to build a "strong, caring community." One of this is achieved we can help others reach this goal. She is also involved with other activities such as recycling, the Family Medical Leave bill, clear-cutting, the environmental process, and voter term limitations. She also promises to fight for the federal government a partner in re-building Rhode Island’s economy.

"I think women in politics is the best thing going," said Cathy O’Conner ’97. "I think it’s time for the woman to wear the pants!" Kushner believes that Rhode Islanders are on fire with political fever. They have the possibility for change because the state is so small. Right now, there are only seven women in the senate, but she hopes that voters will say it is "out time" to change all that.

"I think, Kushner offered her advice to women who want to get involved in politics. "The policy and do what you want to," she said.

"Say what you think and then do it." Kushner lives in Providence with her husband and has two adult daughters, Diana and Nina.

Francois Flees Haiti
Col. Michel François, the chief of Port-au-Prince police in Haiti fled the country. He was reported to have crossed into the Dominican Republic. Several other military officers were said to have accompanied him into exile.

François apparently had been planning, for several days to abandon his post and flee. It is said that he had some trouble when he attempted to cross the Dominican border. He finally came to some sort of agreement with the authorities that allowed him to continue on to Santo Domingo.

U.S. and China Coming Together

Relations seem to be improving between China and the U.S. The U.S. agreed to allow the export of high technology satellites to China. In return, China pledged that it will not sell or transfer surface-to-surface missiles covered under an international accord controlling the transfer of sensitive missile technology.

The agreement was signed by Foreign Minister Qian Qichen of China and Secretary of State Warren Christopher. It commits the two sides to cooperate and promote an end to the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons.

In the Kurile Islands of Russia, which is northeast of Hokkaido, 16 people have been reported to have been killed according to the Associated Press. The islands were hit by 20 shocks which damaged buildings and pipelines and cut communications. Japan's Meteorological Agency said the earthquake measured 7.9 on the Richter scale.

Mandela Urges U.S. To Assist Him

Nelson Mandela, president of South Africa, visited the United States for the first time since he was inaugurated. He thanked the American people for helping to overturn the apartheid system. He then urged them to join his nation in its newest struggles: overcoming poverty and building its economy.

Mr. Mandela reminded the American people that the U.S. should "not abandon its friend, but must instead invest in a new South Africa."

Disciplinary Measures

On September 26, 1994, a hearing was held to consider the following charges:

- violation of alcohol guidelines - possession (Handbook p. 45)
- use and possession of illegal drug - marijuana (Handbook p. 39, #36)
- the penalties were:
- fines of five hundred dollars
- disciplinary probation for 1994-95 school year

On September 5, 1994 residence assistants were called to Room 208 Raymond Hall for a smell of marijuana. After knocking on the door and a search of the room, a # of different items were apprehended.

Rape Victims Deserve Support

During the course of the past six years, I have had five students tell me, in confidence, that they had been raped. Four of them, with my urging and the urging of their friends, went to the hospital and the police within days of the rape. They could not be persuaded to tell their stories to PC officials. One woman was too afraid to do anything. Three of the rapists who were apprehended, to my knowledge, were not certified; the other two were not caught. And now I'm hearing about rape affecting the PC community again. It's sickening.

There are rape crisis centers and other women's groups that do fine work in counselling victims, but, more importantly, what is needed is for PC students to know that they are not alone. I'm frequently asked from the rest of us is unconditional support. Too often, the women are isolated from the community, not only because of the violence committed against them but also because of the socially-created stigma of being a victim of rape, but because of the shame and rejec-tives, and acquaintances, don't want to talk about it when it is needed most.

When I was in my first year of school at Boston College, a woman

I was dating was brutally raped and beaten up outside a nightclub in downtown

Boston one Friday night. Sue was a grad student in the law school and her best date was visiting the club with some friends after a long week at work. But she was looking for company, and I assumed she was drunk and alone, and a short distance from where we were. We became attacked and, we presumed, left for dead. She was later found by people exiting the club and rushed to a local hospital. During the weekend, Sue told the police that the rapists wore football jackets from a local university, but she was unable to identify them further for they had beaten her face and eyes severely.

I did not find out what the victim

said until the next day. I was told that Monday when, sitting in the O'Neill Library, a few of Sue's friends found and told me. Her parents had told her friends not to tell anyone what had happened, but they felt I should know.

I immediately went to the hospital; though her parents would not allow me to see her, I did see her after they left. Her parents were not very supportive. They were, of course, supportive of her, but they kept trying to figure out ways to hide what had happened. They didn't want anyone at Boston College to know. They did not want it to be in the papers. They were reluctant to have Sue speak with the police. The only way they could pursue the matter at all. They just wanted their daughter to go back to school and forget the whole thing.

When I spoke with Sue, I tried to reassure her that everything would be okay, but I was shocked at what I saw. She was completely beaten, swollen practically beyond recognition.

And she was crying. There had been many x-rays and analyses of doctors and nurses, but she was emotionally upset primarily because she was suddenly confronted with the sense, as she described it, of being terribly alone.

She was an activist.

She made me attend many rallies on the Common that were focusing on women's rights. She would carry a bullhorn and lead the crowd. Sue was an impressive sight; tall and self-assu-ured, she towered over much of the crowd in many ways. Her speeches were short and to the point. She volunteered, also, to help victims of violent crimes, including rape, at various women's centers. But when she herself became a victim, she needed immediate help, support and she didn't get it. A few days after leaving the hospital, Sue took an overdose. She had tried to help her parents' home and died. She was 24 and I'll never forget her.

I believe that because she did not get immediate psychological help. She needed support. She perceived the attack her parents to the attack was devastating to her. She needed comfort, she said, not questions. They wanted to cover everything. They would not let anyone contact doctors or nurses; they were mad at the women's groups, believing their support had failed their daughter, and did not permit any of her friends in those organizations to visit her. So, she recived no support.

After my initial visit to the hospital, I was only able to see her one more time. I called the hospital during the two weeks of her stay to inquire about her condition, but her parents seemed to be everywhere and anywhere around. I snuck in one evening after they had left for the night. She looked much better and tried to smile. But she was not getting the support that she had offered to so many other people. She could only speak of the attack with incredibility.

I spoke of her future. I told her about the future she needed to hear more than that.

The lesson I learned from this tragedy: You must do whatever it takes to help, no matter how much it affects your personal life. You must get them to speak with the police and become involved in the criminal's prosecution. Most importantly, you must get them away from people who only want to cover the whole matter up, who want to keep them from support and activist groups that can and do make a difference.

To recent victims, Pray for courage to get help. Persuade, seek support. And hopefully you will find it and not feel terribly alone.

Editor-in-Chief

By now, most PC students are aware of the Washington Post expose last October on three charges of burglary and sexual assault. Unfortunately, for the victims of past and present invasions, crime is not uncommon in the Elmhurst neighborhood. Every year, reports of breaks-in and physical assault circulate the campus. This year, because of the nature of the assaults, the crimes are hitting home a lot harder.

According to Fr. McPhail, Vice President for Student Services, only one of the sexual assault victims was a Providence College student. However, a source from the Providence Police Department has reported that two of the victims were from PC.

Thank you, Providence Journalism Journal for the first of two articles recently published that purport to report the criminal activities in our campus,

'What serial rapist? Shouldn't the school have warned us before the arrests' and "Protect your students," typed across the top of the paper. The flyers were hung all over campus.

Original Providence College students want an explanation. Many students are convinced that the administration knew of the sexual assaults prior to the man's arrest. However, in a letter sent to all students' and the victims, the administration has given us their answer. Out of respect and support, we cannot ask the administration to comment on this case.

What is the real problem surrounding these assaults and the PC community? Ignorance. The students are ignorant to the fact that the administration can and will protect them from everything. The administration is ignorant to think that letters in mailboxes will answer all the questions circulating around campus.

We all want to feel safe.

Most PC students come from suburban neighborhoods, suburbs where crime is relatively low and people feel safe in their homes. Also, many PC students feel that school is their home away from home. The city of Providence is not like a suburban neighborhood. We cannot leave our windows open at night and think that this is okay. We must rely on our school administrations, take necessary precautions and keep ourselves safe.

We cannot rely on someone else to take care of these things. We need to make sure we remain aware of neighborhood crime.

We have chosen to come to PC and, for some, chosen to live off campus in the city. I am not saying we should live in constant fear of crime, but as adults, we must take responsibility for ourselves and each other. If you are a victim of robbery, assault, or any crime, report it to Fr. McPhail. He will alert the students through their mailboxes, the bulletin board and the Student Congress office, and The Cowl.

If you do not feel as though you are receiving the information from the administration, help make your own way to feel safe. And look for reports in The Cowl on Elmhurst crime. They will cite the local police reports weekly and reporting on anything that we feel the students should know. We must help ourselves and each other if we want to be safe.

Several stories on the pages of the Providence Journal have been hidden from us, it is understandable why some students have taken the initiative to hang the flyers and make us aware of the situation. Hopefully, the flyers have made the students and the administration think hard about the crimes that have taken place. Privacy is something we are all entitled to, but so is information. Information can be provided without breaking someone's right to confidentiality. We need to inform each other or there will be even more than two victims. Instead of avoiding the crimes that have happened, we should be challenging them off with an administra-

An Urgent Need For The C.I.A.

_by Robert Mendes '95  Editorial Writer_

Last week, Congress created an independent commission to reevaluate the need for the Central Intelligence Agency. Both the President and the C.I.A. have voiced their opposition but the establishment of such a commission was inevitable since the CIA is a governmental institution. This commission is a necessity precisely because the Cold War is over and the move should be welcomed by the President.

The commission's chief sponsor, Sen. John Warner of Virginia, said that he is confident the commission would not "slash and burn" the C.I.A. This is an important point that both the President and the C.I.A. are missing. While Warner recognized the need for the C.I.A. entirely, most see this position as a predictable gesture. Instead of trashing the C.I.A., Sen. Warner and others want to see if it can conduct its business more efficiently and effectively and with respect. The commission now that its original mission is over.

Most critics of the C.I.A. point to the arrest of Aldrich Ames as evidence that the C.I.A. is demoralized and falling to conduct itself on an international scale. Ames was arrested earlier this year for selling secrets to Moscow for millions of dollars. He may have compromised the secrecy of more than a dozen operations as well as endanger the lives of many agencies. Since the C.I.A. is no longer effective, they argue, it should be disbanded.

Their argument, however, is dangerously naive and the need to rein in preventing terrorist nations from carrying out their evil intentions against the U.S. Countries like North Korea, Libya, Iran and Iraq would come to look at the U.S. somehow. As long as governments like these exist, there is a need for the C.I.A.

Even more significant is that the C.I.A. has always played a major role in preventing terrorist nations from carrying out their evil intentions against the U.S. C.I.A. is the Middle East or Asia, for example, if the permissible hostile nations are unknown. Any instability in these regions could lead to instability in the U.S. trading partners for the U.S. It is not in the best interests of the U.S. to ignore changes in these areas of the world.

It seems clear that the commission's ultimate job is to articulate the new mission of the C.I.A.

Bobbett In Port We Are ...PC

_by Vera Schommer '95  Editorial Writer_

John Wayne Bobbett has started in a XXX rated hardcore, "uncut", porno flick to be released on October 10. Sound interesting? The movie's producers think we will all run out to see it. Unfortunately, they are probably right about a good portion of our population, and frankly, it's an ironic comment on our warring dis- grace. Yes, American society with its goopy eyes over the famous and the fascinating has been fed once again. But there's more.

As a recent USA Today article reports, the 90-minute film is filled with real life misadventures with his ex-wife Lorena. He narrates it Ford, Epping, stylishly, it takes up with six other women with names such as Leatha Weapons and Crystal Gold. His once severed organ is now functioning fully.

Ironically, the film's premiere is a benefit for LA's Charity of the Elders. A group whose principal mission is to help kids forced into prostitution and pornography. Uh, I don't know about this. It is like having an irresistible function--a function to benefit an AIDS charity. It's like having Oliver North guest speaking at a honesty and integrity seminar. They say it doesn't matter where the charity comes from. It must be like the drug dealer giving back to the community which has given him so much.

This new career move also uncovered some confusion about John Bobbett's character. During the trial, the defense acquiesced to the acquisition of rape and battery charges, some women tried to make him a symbol of all insensitive, violent men. Soon after the male bashing began, however, Bobbett became the great American victim, the marriage was mangled, the most viciously brutalized person on earth. But the fact is that John Wayne Bobbett is the sum of the earth, not a victim of a righteous, pathetic wife. What happens is that between him and his wife is the joke of the century. They are the king and queen of idiot.

John Bobbett began by trying to get sympathy on the talk show circuit. So did his family. He sold his story. The money started rolling in and the popularity became excited. He sold out. He was having sex for the camera to prove that he is still a man. This is the media having some fun. It is the pornography industry getting the perfect publicity. It is pathetic.

The C.I.A. always has been indispensable in preventing terrorist nations from carrying out their evil intentions against the United States.

_by John J. Olohan '95  Editorial Writer_

If my body is found in a dumpster somewhere after this editorial is published, everyone will know who did it. The reason is that 100 C.I.A. students who have yet to experience the pleasantries of the Providence Police Department and their co-workers also known as television stations 6 and 10, don't look forward to it. Though some bleeding hearts will say differently, PC students are painted as the bad-guy.

For the past year the Providence Police and their camera buddies start worrying about all the corruption that begins after labor day because of the arrival of Providence College students. Everyone knows that PC has the largest number of crack dealers and cocaine users in the city. In addition, PC students steal each other's cars, kick in each other's windows, and steal from each other's apartments. It is no wonder why the Elmhurst "community" hates to see PC kids around.

Noise, noise, noise. When I heard that the police department investing money into noise meters, I was so happy. When I am walking down Eaton Street at night and I can't tell where the parties are, I reach for my own personal noise meter so I can detect which apartment is causing the disturbance in the atmosphere. The fact that $100 fines are passed out just goes to show how reasonable the police can be.

What is wrong is that Providence College students think that they actually make the police's life miserable. Just because there are groups like Urban Action that spend many unhired hours picking up the junk that the locals find necessary to dump on the ground, doesn't mean that PC students are assets to the community. How about the Big-Brothers? Big-Sisters program? Just because city kids love to come to PC to be entertained by students who take time to do their schedules because they want to make a difference, does not mean PC deserves any thanks.

I don't want even to get into the PC students who work at the soup kitchens and function as a community. They make PC students an even bigger headache.

Don't say anything about filling the holes that the local landlords are full of. They are all known that having college students who spend their days in classes, their nights studying or watching television, while paying sizable rents, are not preferred customers.

The local businesses also hate the fact that PC students spend only 3000 customers, what a headache.

What about the JRF and the RBF? The fact that PC students are renting out those halls. Is it a burden to their business.

PC formalns and semi-formals are also a drag on the local florists.

PC students don't even want to start in on how much of an annoyance our basketball team is to the city of Providence. Just because Providence College basketball in Rhode Islands is to the Boston Celtics in Massachutes, it doesn't mean a thing to the city. I don't care if all the parking garages are filled, along with the bars, and restaurants. PC basketball, just like everything else at PC is a threat to the city.

There are many good people in the Elmhurst community who are a minority who give Providence College and its students a bad name.

A kid next to you in Citv sneezes, and you shy away from his germ infested mist. Another kid coughs uncontrollably on the other side of the room, as the professor pulls out his hardcover. Instead of concentrating on Hume and Descartes, you ponder your vulnerability to deadly organisms you can't even see. Meanwhile, on the other side of the world, people in Surat, India are falling to the worst outbreak of pneumonic plague this century.

In an age when food can be heated in seconds by invisible waves and arcade games can take us into virtual reality we humans tend to view ourselves as superior to anything on the planet. This is why we are often shocked when seemingly ordinary people like Jim Henson perish from a pneumonic virus in a matter of hours. We have a hard time dealing with the fact that microscopic animals wield tremendous power over us.

When our sinuses are affected by a cold virus, we can generally get out of bed. But when it comes to a terrifying virus like one that attacks the respiratory system, we have no defense mechanisms to hide our vulnerability. Most of us just try not to think about the power of viruses, unless we're forced to deal with them. Others, like myself, wonder when and where one will strike, and if we'll be ready.

Most of us dread our first cold of the season. It usually comes when you have nine exams or so, and you're living on two hours sleep. It's like a Red Sox loss; we've come to expect it, even though we pray we won't get it. We're so accustomed to being overcome by the viral enemy and just fighting off, that we think (hope?) it's the same with every other virus. For our sake, we'd better hope that the Board of Health doesn't think this way.

The news of extensive death by plague in India should strike a chord with the entire globe. That chord should resonate that we do not dominate the globe; we share it with billions of infinitesimally small neighbors. I do not want to sound paranoid, but where is our government in getting the word out about the plague? I don't think that people realize that the last time there was an outbreak, we were not as mobile as we are now. All it takes is for one Indian who thinks he has the sniffles to board a jet to LaGuardia and - good-bye New York! In all seriousness, can anybody here recognize the symptoms of plague? And even if you could identify it, would it be too late?

For now, officials are handing out fliers to travelers instructing that if they start to feel ill, they should get to a doctor. While this may be an ingenious suggestion, it doesn't help the hundreds of people on the plane who already breathed the same air of a plague carrier. Pneumonic plague is, after all, an airborne disease. A serious quarantine of all flights to and from India, until we're sure that this outbreak is confined, is required.

A quarantine would help to prevent a serious global predicament, with very little cost. I do not know the precise figures of travel to India, but I would be willing to bet that the cost is less compared to the number of travelers on other flight routes. If I'm not mistaken, there could be an 8000 or two, we'd be saving millions of lives in the process. As far as travel is concerned, we lived without spices for years before Marco Polo, and we'd do just fine now.

For those of you who dismiss India as just another third world country, consider that "that could never happen here," think again. We should all be concerned about the propagation of viruses. They've conquered us for thousands of years, and even in the twentieth century, we've just scratched the surface in studying their power. It could be that we'll never figure them out. They might be Mother Nature's way of getting rid of a pesky species of mammals that has tampered with her ecosystem for too long. Maybe, if we're not careful, the Earth will do as she pleased and take the human race with her, as she should.

This is coming to you from the Canary Islands, where the sun is shining and the wind is blowing. This is the Cowl, a journal kept by students of the Providence College. The Providence Police are the law. They mean they are the law, what they say goes. Their little jesters from Channel 6 and 10 are meatballs looking to fill news time. So be on your guard because you never know when you will be starring on the local news and hanging out in a city prison cell.

Stay tuned to this Friday nights eleven o'clock news for Rich Regan, Seth Ferguson, and Jared "big Daddy Cool" Todd's, starring roles on Channel 6 as the most recent PC convicts arrested for walking and breathing too loud.

Student Spotlight

Eat It While You Can

by Mike Quinn '95
Asst. A&E Editor

After a few minutes of interviewing him, I discovered that one of Ken Milligan's most valuable skills is his extra-ordinary ability to get along with people. You never need him to repeat himself, and it isn't necessary to go over to his house to visit with him. Ken just tells how it is without it, it seems, taking any time whatsoever to arrange it in his head. Of course, this ability is of vital importance when working in the realm of radio.

Originally from Burrillville, Rhode Island, Ken began public speaking through his local 4H Club. When he began high school, he was able to redirect his speaking experience into various clubs and activities. Although he had an interest in music, it wasn't until he arrived at PC that he tried on-air radio broadcasting. He and his preppy assistant, Bob Amaro, became jazz jockeys for WDOM at the beginning of their senior year. "We really wanted to get involved, and we loved playing music," says Ken. Because of his enthusiasm and skills, Ken and Matt's show was awarded jazz program of the year for 1992-93. Ken's attempts to get more involved with the station were successful when he was chosen to be Public Relations Director for his junior year. After proving himself in this role, he was selected to be this year's General Manager.

The 1994-95 WDOM Directors:

General Manager: Ken Milligan Assistant G. M.: Stacie Jontos Program Director: Mike Brennan Office Manager: Kristine Eichert Rock: Eric Schmidt Finance/Live Functions: Skip Wilson Public Affairs: Bob Amaro Productions: Mike Carriere News: Mary Ellen Hart Jazz: Kate Kennedy Technical/Training: Mike Stewart Urban Beats: "Duce" Mahoney Entertainment Center Rep: Joe Raczyński Sports: Joe Dhoši Metal: Mark Fitzgerald Whether liberal or conservative, every new administration brings a certain amount of change. Compared with recent years, WDOM's change this fall has been nothing less than radical. There has been massive restructuring in directors' duties, the result of which is a new fall philosophy of the station. The new director positions include the addition of a Program Director and a representative for "Stuart's"—the new entertainment facility. Some of the programming line-up has been drastically altered in order to take college and non-listening audience. Classical music has been omitted so that there can be a focus on new and local music. "We've changed our lineup a lot, and that was to facilitate what we do best," says Ken. In order to achieve when beginning something new, one must set goals. Ken has had a straightforward idea in mind since he stepped into the General Manager's position. "The goal of the station is to be the best in the state within a month for get approval to up the wattage of the signal so that WDOM may transmit more clearly over a greater area. "We have about one million poten- tial listeners," says Ken.

Through all of this, Ken isn't afraid to give his staff all the credit. He in- cidentally gives praise to everyone who shows a good attitude and puts forth a great deal of energy into the station. He is also aware that his staff is the key to any advanced that WDOM makes this year. "It isn't a matter of my telling people what to do, but that I have a job to do and everyone else has theirs," Ken says. We will either reach the top together or we won't. Hopefully future adminis- trations will be able to take what we've done and just run with it.

When I had just about run out of questions for Ken, I asked the usual in- terview closing question, and expected answer in- volving his future plans to revolutionize the radio industry. Not so.

Ken spent the entire summer in Texas working on cancer research. A se- nior biology major, Ken plans on attending medical school after a year- long masters program. Eventually he wants to work in pediatrics. "From medical school, I'll just do the best I can. Just like here." As far as WDOM's future goes, Ken's impact is impossible to predict, although he's talking about various possibilities for the fall. He has hopes that both cafe- terias will play WDOM over their speaker systems, that WDOM will be playing live in Slavin every Friday, and that WDOM will both play music and present events at the entertainment facility. He also wants to Andino's, located on Federal Hill in Providence, of- fers a good meal at a fair price. However, if you're looking for a nice, leisurely dinner meal, Andinos will disappoint you. After eating on a busy Saturday night.

Dining Out

I feel Andino's is more concerned with seating as many people as possible than sitting their customers enjoy their meal. Andinos offers a relaxed and Welcomely atmosphere that is suitable for enjoying good conversation. The tables are small and intimate, and there is an attractive mural on the wall of Federal Hill. It is not unusual to hear the rich sound of Frank Sinatra playing in the back- ground, or any given night. The menu offers stan- dard Italian-American cui- cine. Dishes such as Veal Parmigian (9.95), Fettuccini Alfredo (8.95) and Chicken Caccitore (8.95) are quite popular, while they also of- fer a variety of Swiss-Italian dishes such as Baked Stuffed Shrimp (13.95) and Broiled New York Sirloin (12.95). They have a variety of ap- petizers such as Fried Moz- zarella (4.75) and Shrimp Cocktail (1.75 each). Des- serts include cheesecake with fresh whipped topping, a crisp and several home- made pies all priced below $3.50. Andinos also has an extensive wine list with sev- eral varieties of red and white wine, along with a number of specialty coffees. For starters, after my guest and I ordered the Garlic Bread (4.00) which was four pieces of garlic bread with slices of pepperoni and tomatoes along with melted mozzarella cheese on top. It was deli- cious. The tomatoes were sliced thin enough as to not make the bread soggy and the pepperoni gave it some- thing to make it more flavor- ful. For entrees, we ordered the Veal Parmesana (11.95) and the Chicken Parmesan (8.50). The Veal Marsala Andino's major shortcoming was its rushed service. Within five minutes after our appetizers and salads were brought out, our waitress gave us the entrees. Thank God I'm a fast eater. Unfortu- nately, I can't say the same for my guest, who didn't get to enjoy garlic bread because they took it away before she was done. Then when I finished my meal before my guest did, our waitress came over, cleared my plate and asked me if I wanted any coffee or dessert. I kindly replied to my guest and she was still eating and said "I think I'll wait till she's done." I'm surprised they didn't offer a speedy express dinner special.

If it weren't for the rushed service, I would've called Andino's a top notch restaur- ant. Nobody likes to be rushed when they go out to a restaurant for fine dining. Andino's should realize this and worry more about the satisfaction of their custom- ers than the number of tables they can fill.

Rhino Runs Rampant

by Patrick Hepp '96

A&E Writer

How can one describe Rhino's show Friday night at the entertainment center? Are you a McDonald's fan? The only way I can describe Rhino is by comparing them to a Ranch Burger meal value with the Swiss cheese, fresh roll, bacon, and a quarter pounder of beef—super-sized! Absolutely scrumptious!

Rhino's four man line-up consists of some familiar faces to the Providence College campus and is a name which will surely become more popular, due to raw talent and originality, than some of the long forgotten PC bands which still haunt the campus, Dirt Merchants, Twirling Tea Bags, Anti In The Cellar, etc. Rhino's show kicked off with a brief rendition of "Amazing Grace" and then into a few licks of another great American tune, "Eye of the Tiger." With all kidding aside, Rhino put on a great show.

Their 16 song repertoire consisted of powerful vocals, smooth baselines, full guitar sounds, and drum beats that calm to mind Steve Perkins. "Rhino," the first song of their opening set, started off with a "ballad" style Instrumental, which later progressed into a rocking tune that jammed with an incredible drum beat and cool melodies (guitar and vocal). The second song "Cat Got" had very powerful vocal and guitar work which reminded me of the Afghan Whigs song "What Jail Is Like." The first set also contained original songs titled "Abi's Innominate," "Me and the Road," "Covington." Also in the first set was a cover of Paul McCartney and Elvis Costello's "Landed Blue." Now I have never heard the original and I fear that my vision of how it will sound, due to Rhino's awesome version, just won't measure up (kind of like the effect Hendrix's "Fire" had on me after I had heard the Red Hot Chili Peppers version).

After a 10 minute break, enough time for 50 cent sodas and $1 dollar nachos, Rhino returned with a different feel to their sound and performance. One student, Karl Schiffgen '95, called the second set, "Kind of imagery with different feeling." The set kicked off with "Green and Red," an original song with an altered line-up: John Nugent '96 switched from drums to acoustic guitar and lead vocals, and Pat Rock '95 put down his axe to pick up a harmonica and walked on some melodies. The follow up was a cover all we know (maybe not by choice), "Feathr." The set was known to make butts shake took on a new meaning Friday night when Rhino ripped apart the pretty image George Michael created and replaced it with one of their own, which is given my approval. I'm not sure what image they had in mind but it wasn't missed if you've got to hear it.

Another cover Rhino put under their belt was Fat's Domino's "Ain't That A Shame," that singer/guitarist Scott Janovitz '97 sang out with a John Lennonish voice and feel. Other songs in Rhino's second set were entitled "Drag," "Nearby Present," "Ocean Wave," "Monster Pain," and "Shoes" (a song which anyone who has had a roommate will appreciate). Rhino closed with an original called "A Song (Mark is Love)" which again included a change in instruments with Bassist (Bassist should always have a capital B. They deserve it) Mark O'Brien playing guitar and singing while guitarist Pat Rock picked-up Mark's bass. This song was a perfect example of the flowing jam session feel which dominated the second set.

There were no empty spaces in the music which Rhino offered its enthusiastic crowd. Everything had its place in the music of Rhino whether it be a melodic bass line, an acoustic guitar riff or just some great percussion work. Rhino is one of the tightest bands that have ever been in the PC area and offers a great sound which will change on a listener just when they get comfortable and lean back (I have a habit of leaning forward when listening to new music). If you missed Rhino on Friday be sure to see them first chances you get. I swear you'll leave a newborn Rhino-fan.

Simply Monstrous

R.E.M.

Monster

Warner Bros. Records

Grade: A

Aside from musical quality, I tend to judge how enjoyable an album is on how often you can play it. Can you play a particular album when you're sleeping, reading, partying, making love, and thinking — in all of these situations? This kind of album is hard to come by. However, this past week I stumbled upon one.

The album in question is a real monster. In fact, it's Monster — the very new, very, very, very surprising, very good September 27th release from R.E.M. With Monster, R.E.M. will have to fulfill the high expectations of fans, due to their last hit record, Automatic For The People. However, I feel that with the new complexity and experimentation of this record, R.E.M. will have no problem in doing so.

The R.E.M. we hear in Monster is, surprisingly, an R.E.M. I've never heard before. It is safe to say that the band's style changed with the change of music in general from the '80s to the '90s. Back in R.E.M.'s early years, with memorable songs like "Gardener's Night," and "South Central Rain," simple sounds and rhythms were combined in perfect union to create that great, original R.E.M. style we all remember. However, in Monster we see something very different. Instead of that homogenized simplicity we're used to, Monster gives us R.E.M.'s new style — that of a versatile complexity in both lyrics and music along with the usual technical genius that Berry, Buck, Mills, and Stipe use to put it all together.

One outstanding similarity between the R.E.M. of old and the R.E.M. of Monster is their continuing ability to give their fans the kinds of catchy tunes they always have. Though a different approach is used, songs like "Crush with Eyeliner" and "Tongue" have the ability to become just as memorable as some of those great oldies we know of.

This release features many smooth, flowing songs. But perhaps none as captivating as the first hit release and new MTV video: "What's the Frequency, Kenneth?". As track 1, this song serves as a great opening for the album, with its biting, gripping riffs and upbeat rhythm. This song is also very catchy, so look for it to be a big hit in the next month or so.

Monster also gives a type of pure sensual insanity, that R.E.M.'s previous records did not. With sensual titles like "Star 69," "Tongue," "Bang and Blame," and "Let Me In," Monster gives us the kind of musical eroticism we're looking for in this generation.

Final thoughts! Well, to say that Monster is an unbelievable album is about accurate. It does everything you want an album to do. It possesses an original musical quality that is astronomical, it provides us with an idea of exactly how talented R.E.M. is, and it gives listeners a flavor of pure, true rock and roll. It allows you to play it in almost any situation. Monster is a must buy. As I would recommend it to anyone, whether you like R.E.M. or not.

CAMP HEARTLAND

by Michael James '97, Class President

On October 13th, The Pastoral Service Organization will open up its doors to include the Camp Heartland Project - the Providence Chapter. What may you ask is this new organization? Well, I am going to attempt to tell you about it now.

For the past two summers, I have had the honor of staffing the largest camp in the country for children affected by the HIV/AIDS epidemic. Camp Heartland gives children the chance to have a normal week of hugs, fun, love, and most of all support. So many youngsters are deprived of these necessities of life; instead they live under the dark clouds from the ignorance around them.

Stop now and think about what your childhood would have been like without the loving support of others. It is your chance to reach out and support children all over the country.

The Heartland Project will have two major goals: to increase AIDS awareness at Providence College and to raise money for more children to attend Camp Heartland. I NEED YOUR SUPPORT!!!

Please attend the informational meeting on Thursday, October 13th at 7:00 p.m. in '64 Hall. We will explore all dimensions of the Heartland Project and you will get a better understanding of what it entails. Also a camper of mine, 13 year old Adam, will tell us a little about his experiences living with AIDS.

Do not miss out!! Attend the meeting on the 13th and open your hearts to the children of the Camp Heartland Project...coming soon to a campus near you!!!

WOMEN'S STUDIES PRESENTS...

RICH A Guaranteed Lunch Date

by Karen Stauffer '96

Features Writer

No matter what year you are or where you now live, you have definitely met Richard Vallante. You may not know him by that name, but you do know him. Rich is the Dining Room Manager at Raymond Cafeteria and if you just know him as the guy who yells at you for not having your I.D. card, well then you do not know him well enough. Because I work for Rich in the cafeteria, it is with great sincerity that I write this article.

Rich began working at Providence College eight years ago. And his favorite part of the job is, "meeting kids, and interacting with them." If you spend any time in the cafe, you know this is true. If he is not asking you your name, then he is asking you how your day is going. Rich really cares about students, and perhaps Talon Greene summed it up best by saying, "Rich is like a father-figure to the whole cafe."

If you wonder why Rich chose the cafeteria to work in, it is safe to assume that it was the twenty one years he spent working in the restaurant business. Rich definitely knows his food, and extremely eating out at restaurants with his wife. And to add to that is he takes special pride in his own freshly grown vegetables.

Beyond the culinary world, Rich enjoys many other activities. One of which further shows his love for kids. If you check out a local high school football game, you may find Rich out on the field.

Fortunately for the players he is not playing, rather he is officiating the play. I have a feeling that no one argues with his calls! When the football season ends and the winter cries passes, Rich hangs up his whistle in order to spend time at the beach. He "loves the ocean."

Aside from the large family at the cafe, which ranges from older men and women to freshman at P.C., Rich spends time with his lovely wife, daughter and grandson. I suppose it is safe to say that Rich loves sports. From his family at the cafe to his family at home, he enjoys spending time with all of the people around him and these people enjoy being around Rich. Nancy Sabitoni works with Rich and comments that, "Rich ardently exhibits 'hands on' control with all of the many situations he is subjected to on a daily basis." Not only is Rich loved by his fellow workers, he is respected, too.

Whether you live on-campus and see Rich everyday or if you live off-campus and beg Rich for a decent meal every now and then, he is a great guy to know. So don't be intimidated by his burly appearance, he wouldn't hurt a fly (I hope he likes this article).

Rich would like to offer a little advice to all of you: "Take advantage of what's out there. Use your time wisely." I couldn't have said it better myself; however, I have a little advice for you, too: please don't forget your I.D. cards because it really is a pain to type in your number every day. And don't try to sneak into the cafe because Rich knows. I don't know how he knows, but he does.

FYI Update:
O.J. Deserves a Fair Trial

by Stacy A. Baker '96

"We interrupt this program to bring you a special bulletin..."

With everything that went on this summer it seems like every show on TV was interrupted. You know what I am talking about. Everybody is talking about, O.J. Simpson. Like the rest of the add, I was intrigued with the whole thing at first. But after A Current Affair advertised an interview with O.J.'s paper boy, I vowed not to discuss the case. I have, however, in this case, made an exception.

Don't get me wrong. I think O.J. did not want to cover the story. "It's pure sensationalism." Sound familiar? Well, all of the elements of O.J.'s case were there. There were people in front of Duke's house with signs of support, policemen who had "no comment" about anything, interviews with friends and colleagues, pieces of incriminating evidence (a moon rock), and of course, the slow-speed car chase.

Duke phoned Murphy, on the air, from his white Bronco. I, uh, mean Caravan. He claimed that she was the only person who was treating him fairly. Well, I have seen the T-shirts, the books, and the trading cards and I tend to agree with Dangerous Duke; she did treat him fairly. It saddens me to think that the only journalist who remembers that in this country a person is innocent until proven guilty, is a fictional character on television. It has been said, "We build up heroes just to watch them fall, but deep down we know that there might be giants among us.

My roommate and I listened as Murphy ended the show. "A timely song from my generation said, 'Where have you gone Joe DiMaggio, nailed by his lonely eyes to your, well this nation's eyes are still turning, looking, hoping.'"
Dressed to Impress: A Social Commentary

by Melissa McCrosson ‘95
Features Writer

Now I think I’ve seen it all! Black tank dress, black nylons, and heels. I think what really made the outfit complete was her LL Bean backpack. No, she wasn’t going to JRW hiding liquor in her bag, she was going to class. They come in pairs, they come in dresses, and now they seem to be coming in heels. What is going on?

As I embark on my fourth and final year at this Divine Institution of ours, there is one phenomenon which I am still trying to grasp: If there is no dress code here, why do so many students seem to impose one upon themselves? Before I was hurled head first into this journey of higher education, I was led to believe that one of the key elements of the whole college experience was being able to roll out of bed five minutes before class, throw on sweatpants, and sprint to class. I realized rather quickly that such was not the case at Providence College.

I like to describe my own style of dress as casual. Some may think that sometimes I am too casual, but that is because I finally gave up trying to keep up with the competition. I have always had all early morning classes, and am sometimes surrounded when I look around my 8:30 and see perfectly coifed girls dressed in skirts, blouses, and other ensembles, often complete with pantyhose! I look down on my own jeans and sweatshirt and wonder the reasons as to what makes these girls so different from myself.

First of all, being that this is a Catholic institution, many of the students here are fresh off the boat from parochial high school. At many of these high schools, there was a dress code. If there was no standard uniform, then there was at the very least a "No jeans or sneakers" policy. For many, this is the first time, after twelve years of schooling, that they do not have to lay out their uniforms for the next morning. With all of this freedom, what is one to wear? For these brainwashed students, wearing slacks is dressing down. I, on the other hand, went to good old non-dominational High School where the only semblance of a dress code was a sign on the front desk which read, "Shirts and shoes must be worn at all times." You know those crazy public school heathens.

Another important factor I considered in my analysis of why some of my female peers come to class looking as if they just stepped off the set of Melrose Place is money. Step back and take an honest look at the monetary situation of much of the PC population. It is no secret that tuition at this school is pretty steep, and I know very well that a plurality of our students are fundazzled. Let’s face it, these kids come from money. Not that my own financial situation is destitute, its just that I can hardly remember the last time my parents handed me the credit card and told me to go crazy.

I think that one of the major reasons that students here get so decked out, is the whole single-sex dorm situation. I must say that in the past year, as some of the dorms go coed, the fashion situation is becoming more relaxed. Amen! But for those still in McKinney, Meagher, Aquinas, Guzman, and other single-sex halls, there is an air of mystery as to what goes on behind closed doors in the process of getting dressed. If PC has all coed dorms, Joe would have to knock you over and stomp on your face to do it. These are generally the people who actually have friends and write letters. After they bulldoze their way up to their boxes, they'll expertly turn the dials and triumphantly pull out stacks of envelopes with real letters inside. They then make a big production of demonstrating how heavy the pile of letters is. If some jealous observer makes the chance, however, the next place these people end up is head down in the beautiful blue recycling bin.

That brings us to those who are lucky if they get an overdue notice from the library. For some reason, these people are still around to get to their boxes. This means that only people who are not pushing and shoving are the ones who stuff our mailboxes. They are too busy laughing at us safe behind the pigeon holes. I can’t blame them.

Between classes, from about 10:30 to 2:30, is rush hour. If your mailbox is in one of those big boxes, you'll get a little closer than you'd really like with 12 or 13 of your neighbors. (It's kind of like one of those those book stuffing contests, only Potisie and Ralph Maljahn aren't there.)

If you’re really lucky, though, your box is on Postage Highway. This is that long strip of boxes that at its best looks like a well traveled back road and at its worst resembles some street in New York City where traffic has stopped and people are out for blood. Instead of honking horns and screaming, there is jabbing elbows, toe stomping heels and syrupy sweet apologies such as, "I'm sorry I hit you in the head with my backpack. I really didn’t mean to. Kaa ha ha!" If these mean spirited people find their boxes empty, they become even worse. They figure they sat in traffic for no reason and that someone is being a jerk. If they can’t have their own mail, they’ll have yours. I would suggest just giving them a letter or two; you yourself have been in the position of making it out with all of your limbs intact.

Step back and take a look at how you grimly wrestle to get your box. Take it easy, you’re only getting your mail. Let someone merge instead of running through it a recycling bin. And if traffic is too heavy, go grab a bag of potato chips. Wait until things slow down. You'll save yourself some grief and in those extra 10 minutes, maybe you'll get a letter or at least some Ronzi's coupons.

Leave Us Kids Alone!!!

by Matt Bannell '95
Asst. Features Editor

All right now, campers, I'm going to vent for a little while so just grab a drink, put on your thinking cap (whoa, buddy, your thinking cap not your gym hat) and follow along. This is my opinionated article so I'll first have to give a disclaimer: "This article doesn't in any way reflect the opinion of The Cowl. Any attempt to rebroadcast, redistribute, or retype the following without the expressed written consent of this paper, yours truly, or the NFL will be strictly encouraged." OK, now that that's out of the way...Let's get ready to rumble!!

The Columbus Day Weekend is upon us and well, I'm glad. A lot of people can go home and enjoy the excitement of their respective homes without worrying about the cops riding around your house if the dog's barking too loud! Acast, Rey, Borge, nit's RRRhonda...muh-oh! or if your mom's breaking the noise ordinance by screaming at you for bringing home way too much laundry (she's gotta be taught a lesson, either). Before you handicap her could you ask her what's supposed to be for dinner)?). Hopefully, when we come back, it'll be different but heck, who are we kidding?

How miserable can you make life for a PC student? Parties just don't happen too much anymore, but you probably already knew that. The bars are desolate, but the tumbleweed outside them could give that away. What are people doing...well...all I can say is that it would sure be nice to have a "friend" (a friend in need is a friend for the deed). But seriously, I know that there's been problems in the past but do we really need this "copp car for every student" policy which the police feel is the only way to prevent students from wreaking havoc upon the Elmhurst Community? I can't believe how many cops drive around the streets on the weekend nights. How about this for a new drinking game...every time a police car goes by...DRINK!!! You'll be housed in the short amount of time it takes them to catch on to the fact that you're having a "party", which in your mind simply looks like 8 or 9 people mingling in the room together (and why didn't they break up the neighbor's pajama party the other night...those darn sheets sure make up their fair share of noise too). And now the police can do "incognito" in their big "Look at me, I'm obviously an undercover cop" Oldsmobucks or the now infamous white van, known to be hailed down by more than a few students who thought it was the shuttle (Unsuspecting, naive student (we'll call him Jared)-"Yeah, can I go to Oak-land?" -Cop- "Well, that open container you've got can get you just as far as the police station" -Jared-ok, I can walk the rest of the way from there..."). The parties now get broken up so easy that you can have a pool to guess how long the bash will last (one guess ten minutes...could you And now the police can go "incognito" in their big "Look at me, I'm obviously An undercover cop" Oldsmobucks guys take the money I won to buy me out?). You go to a party, it's good for a little while but then...the flashes are in your face, the beers are dropped, and the party is of course, over. Now some would say that we shouldn't be drinking if we're underage...it's illegal. Well, so is breaking the speed limit but students almost get run over trying to cross Eaton Street because of crazy leadfoots. You don't see speed traps and cops with radar meters in their backpacks walking down the street, now DO Ya, hmmm?? All I'm saying here is that the students are not alone, they just like to party and that's so wrong I don't wanna be right. The real problem behind this situation is that the community doesn't like us, period. They're here year round and they're just sick and tired of the parties and the noise and the headaches that the students are the cause of. The lines are drawn and there are...us...versus them, the bad versus the good, the weak versus the strong. That's right, we're weak, they're strong. If you can't tell that they're in control, you haven't been off campus in a while because it just isn't the same. Arrests, fines, undercover police, raids, noise meters, foot patrols, increased surveillance, AAAAAAHHH!!! It just isn't the same...it's just the same... There is an empty feeling off campus...it sort of reminds me of when I lived here over the summer. Not dull but just the feeling that something was missing (I told you I went to get to the bathroom and it just wasn't the same). Obviously that missing spark over the summer was the lack of the student's bodies (or should that be the lack of student's bodies?). Now that we're back, that feeling is still there. The missing element is that which brings this school together. Why I came here in the first place, the sense of community (and I don't mean the party's show). It's kind of funny how I used that word back there because the main reason why that situation rot's is that the surrounding neighborhood feels that to strengthen their community they must weaken ours. If one can't meet in parties or bars or whatever, one tends to get isolated from the players. How do you meet new people? Where else is one supposed to go? The school doesn't have many, if any programs on Friday or Saturday nights...the library...closes early (like someone's going to study anyway)...what would they like the students to do, play with themselves (solitaire, anybody)? How about the freshmen who aren't allowed to come to school? The school is setting the tone so why do they act "tone-deaf" when the students turn around and tell them that the system sucks?-

Today, Father Kehew taught me the belief that man is by nature a social being (shameless extra credit plug). To take that further, PC students are by nature, party freaks. If you take that away from us by clamping down...well...PC would lose the sense of community which starts around the key and travels into every other aspect of our Providence College experience. This sounds superficial but I really feel its true. Can't they find some other way to do with their money then spend it on Fort Knox-type surveillance...Send Rhonda on vacation...some place tropical that deserves it...how about Haiti?? Pack up the noise meters, send the undercover cops to the state house. Give the foot patrol desk jobs. All we students want to do is hang out with a beverage in our hand, talk to our friends, maybe find a couple more (Hey baby, do you have a JJW date...umm...do you want one?), make some memories (remember that time you fell down the stairs and broke your leg, that was the greatest...) and simply have a rocking good time. To quote some body famous, "...Leave Us Kids Alone!!!"

The PC golf team has suffered from a case of rising scores in the past month. The Friars' opened the season with a 3rd place showing at the September 10 University of Connecticut Invitational. The Friars then suffered a slight disappointment when they failed to defend their 1993 Big East Championship. The midblings continued last weekend (no milligans allowed) at a freezing Toski Invitational Tourney. The frustrating fort-night for PC's putters began at the Big East Championship on September 24-25, when they traveled to the

PC followed the 15-6 loss with a stronger performance in game 2. Kelly Tooley aced SHU to make the game a one-point affair, 11-10, but the Lady Friars could not get over the hump. After the Pirates, leading 13-11, regained the serve, they picked up the final two points, aided by some miscommunication on the PC side.

Early in game 3, the Lady Friars showed off some of their talent. In a sequence that involved four sideouts, but no points for either side, PC had four kills, including a Koprowski missile. The Friars fought back from a 6-1 deficit, rallying 4 points on Nicole Trudeau's serve. The impressive run included a kill by Koprowski, Tooley and Lotus' ninth kills of the day and a strong dig by Trudeau. The flame went out for PC, though, and not even two time outs could stop the Seton Hall stormer. PC fell, 15-6, to end the match.

Coach Matejka expressed some concern about her team's defense. The Lady Friars began the week ranked 20th nationally in team blocks, with an average of 3.17 a game, but slipped to 2nd in the Big East, with an average of 2.9 a game. The Friars still rank 2nd in the conference in digs, with 15.9 a game, but managed only 35 against SHU, an average of just under 12 a game, in their loss to SHU.

The Lady Friars take their 12-3 (0-1) record to Pittsburgh this weekend. PC matches up with Big East foe Pitt Friday, and then takes on Robert Morris Saturday. Assistant Paul Amares feels good about the team's chances, and attitude. "We're very loose, very relaxed. Our girls are having some fun and challenging themselves. We just need to transfer that attitude onto the court." Coach Matejka summed it up neatly: "It's a simple game. You serve the ball, you pass the ball, you set the ball, you hit the ball. If we don't make it complicated, we'll win."
Breakfast At Newport

The grass is green, people are playing tennis, and the stands are filled to their capacity. No doubt, you must be at Winstead's Wrong!! The International Tennis Hall of Fame in Newport, R.I. was the setting for the 10th Annual Women's Grass Court Doubles Championship hosted by Salve Regina University. The tournament featured eight teams competing in three flights of doubles play. Not accustomed to toning up on a grass surface, the PC Friar's quickly found it not to their liking. But the PC netters were bound to have their "strawberries and cream".

In Flight 1, Jen Dulka and Christina Martin totaled the most wins (19) in the round robin series, to advance to the final round. Their opponents were Beth Cady and Sarah Evans of Wheaton College. Due to rain in the late afternoon, the match was played on an unfamiliar, indoor surface. The Wheaton girls downed the Friars 6-4, 1-6, 6-4 in what turned out to be a see-saw match of momentum. "The Wheaton girls played a real aggressive style of doubles. We didn't play as aggressive and it cost us the match," stated Jen Dulka. Wheaton went on to sweep all three flights of the doubles play. The PC netters placed third overall.

The Friars played Central Connecticut, Bowdoin, and Tufts this past week. Against Central Conn, on Friday the Friars were swept in the doubles, putting them in a 0-1 hole. With a split of the singles, the Central Conn. squad held on for a 4-3 victory, ending PC's 4-game win streak and dropping their record to 5-2. Winning their matches were Jen Dulka, Christina Martin, and Christy Judge.

The squad played Bowdoin on Sunday. The team won 5-5-3, boosting their record to 6-2. Jen Dulka and Christina Martin played well and won convincingly. With the score 4-3 in favor of the Friars, the match was in the hands of Gretchen Marquard and Natalie Leduc. Leduc dropped the first set, and Marquard was down 1-6, 3-5. Gretchen commenced, "I was really upset when I lost the first set. At 3-5 in the second set, I told myself that I was not going to let that girl beat me." Holding true to her promise, Gretchen came back, winning in three sets 1-6, 7-6, 6-2. Coach LaBranche commended the effort of Gretchen Marquard, "Her effort out there was incredible!!! To come back in that fashion, after being down and losing her previous match to Central Connecticut is a big plus for her and for the team." Coach LaBranche also reported that Cahira Castellini, coming off a broken wrist, played well in an exhibition at Bowdoin.

Field Hockey Still In The Lead

PC Boosts Record Up A Few More Notches

The Women's field hockey team put another "W" in the column after a non-league game against Lafayette College last Sunday. Coming off a tough Big East road loss to the Boston College Eagles last Wednesday night, the Lady Friars showed that they could get back on track and move toward their goal of a conference championship season. The only obstacle holding back this talented team is injury. Standout freshman goaltender Jamie Soteriadis pulled her hamstring muscle at BC and was unable to play against Lafayette. Another key player, sophomore Meredith Zenowich, has been out for the last six games with an achilles tendon injury. Before getting hurt, Zenowich had already tallied four points and is still leading the team in defensive saves with three.

The Lady Friars took the field Sunday knowing that a win over Lafayette was vital. The first half saw the two evenly matched teams battle to a scoreless halftime. Lafayette had only been able to get four shots on goal, while the black and white only registered two.

After a defensive first half, the Lady Friars returned to the field and went shot for shot with the opposition. With just under five minutes remaining in the game, the top returning scorer from the '93-'94 season, senior-tri-captain Lauren Khozodian, knocked one home for the game winner. Sophomore Courtney Dolan had eight saves in the game and was awarded the shutout yesterday afternoon.

The Lady Friar field hockey team returns to action this weekend with games against Old Dominion and William & Mary. The games will take place on Saturday and Sunday at 1PM on Haydenrick Field.

Up Close With Lauren Khozozian
The Strength Of Support

by Annica Ambrose '96
Assistant Sports Editor

Strength is not just a movement of the body. Strength is not having muscles and power to run and jump. It isn't the weight on a barbell, it isn't just speed on the field. What constitutes strength is encouraging words and team unity. It is holding the tears back when pride is important and digging inside to find will.

Lauren Khozozian is a big part of the strength of this year's PC field hockey team. The senior co-captain knows what it is to dig inside and show her teammates just where this strength lies.

Lauren began playing field hockey during her freshman year of high school for the Red Raiders of Watertown, MA. She had originally been a soccer player in junior high, but decided to join field hockey when her high school did not have a soccer team. Playing alongside former PC All-American, Cathy Giuden, Lauren helped lead this Watertown High team to three consecutive Massachusetts State Championship titles her sophomore, junior and senior years. She was recruited by Providence coach, Jackie Barto, and joined the Friar squad in her position as left wing on the field.

In her field hockey career at Providence College, she has maintained steady playing time all four years. This season in particular, she leads the team as Co-Captain with teammates Melissa Mills and Kim Robbins. Playing the left wing position requires Lauren to take the ball down the field, get the ball on goal in an attempt to open scoring opportunities, and often take a shot on goal herself. So far this season, Lauren has banged in two goals and one assist for the Lady Friars. Most recently was in this weekend's game against Lafayette when Khozozian had the only goal for the Friars. Lauren's most exciting memory of playing at Providence was made during her freshman season in 1991 when PC captured the Big East Championship.

As a captain, Lauren is called to lead her team, not only on the field, but in terms of keeping spirits high even when there are suicides, drills, and team runs ahead. "I relate to them on and off the field equally," she says of her teammates, "and not just as a player." When asked about Lauren's role as captain, the team members see Lauren's emotional strength and use it as an example for themselves. They look up to the way she deals with certain pressures, criticisms, and other team "dilemma's."

No matter who it is beginning to break, they can always look to Lauren for advice, encouragement, or even just a reassuring glance, telling them that things will get better.

As an individualized Art/Marketing major, Lauren has coped well with the hectic schedule of being a student-athlete. She has proved herself as an outstanding athlete and team leader. If anywhere, she gets the credit she deserves from the opinions of her teammates who say that when it comes to team leadership, Lauren comes through with her "silent support."

What If...?
The Fantasy World Of No Pros

by Justin Macione '95
Sports Editor

In recent weeks, we have seen the world of sports transform itself into an anarchistic world of strikes and lockouts. Due to baseball, hockey, and basketball time disputes, the only way fans can catch a major sporting event is on the weekend.

Many observers suggest that one positive result from the professional greed is a possibility that the horse-minded might attend a PC women's sports event. Others feel that a lack of televised sporting events will open the door to the mainstream success of programs such as Candelips for Cash. Due to the pathetic nature of the situation, let's view a drastic scenario eliminating all professional sports leagues.

Although this suggestion will drastically alter our lives, it could provide us with more enjoyable times. At the college level, basketball, football, and hockey players will have less motivation to "cut corners", because they will realize that their athletic playing careers are over upon graduation and they must adapt to the "real world". In addition, this is the only solution to placing women's sports on an even keel with their male counterparts. Fans will be more inclined to attend games for fun, regardless of gender, rather than stargaze for two hours.

The "no-pros" law will send PC to their fate in a different, clearer direction. Some will spread out their interests and attend more cultural events and join volunteer groups. Others will put their bonds to good use by pushing Providence College "over the top", into the upper echelon of Northeast drinking schools. Guys who claim they never meet women can go to "Monday night at Sturzts", instead of watching Monday Night Football in their room.

The ensuing lack of athletic motivation will also improve the living quality of towns and cities throughout the country, such as my hometown, 30 minutes north of Boston. 75% of the drug problem will wither away, due to the disappearance of steroid abuse by former NFL and NHL hopefuls. The lack of "roid ragers" will also protect a lot of damaged houses and vulnerable faces. Many of the town's female residents will realize that there's more to life than going out with the hockey captain. 40 year old men might stop trying to recapture touchdown drives or hopefully the anti-athletes will cease attempting to create the most original Pearl Jam band cover (Unfortunately, this might induce the suicide of Al Bundy).

Professional athletes will learn a lesson from the abolition of their existence as we know how to work a "real" job. Following all of the strikes and lockouts, these paid "paints" should be able to provide expert advice when they join a local carpentry, house, or bar tenders union. Some former jocks will look towards the higher ideals of government jobs. For example, Robert Parish can become a spokesman for the marijuana legalization lobby. All of the displaced owners can learn the difficulty of running a business without a captive audience. The loss of alayka agents will help unog the legal industry. Most importantly these changes will allow repeat drug offenders such as Steve Howe and Dwight Gooden to see their career plans fullfilled; the chance to get high and work at the same time. This will happen as long as your local burger joint doesn't institute an employee testing program (What a Whopper of a change!).

Men's Soccer Keeps The Ball Rolling

Junior, co-captain, Chaka Daley kicked in a goal for Providence in Saturday's game vs. Pittsburgh.

Good things come to those who wait, and for the Providence College (3-4) men's soccer team, the wait lasted for over seven days in a rain-soaked battle with Yale on the road.

Facing the Ivy League Bulldogs, Providence was able to hold one of the most explosive offenses in the country to zero points. They completed what in their minds has to be their most important win of the year and perhaps a reason to better things down the line.

The Friars, thanks to an outstanding four-saver performance in goal from Mike Wright, held a Yale team that might be the most dangerous of the season at 6-0-3. Wright's performance provided Providence's offensive spark with a first period goal at 37:53 with an assist by Juan Acvevedo. The win snapped PC's two-game losing streak and put them on a high as they prepared for Pittsburgh.

On Sunday afternoon, PC took on Pittsburgh at home. The Friars look an early 1-0 lead on a goal by co-captain Christian Meyer. PC battled but was overmatched by the Panthers front line who then rallied for two quick goals with time counting down in the first period to build a 2-1 advantage.

Providence controlled the better half of the second period with Markgraf tallying his second goal of the game on the even the score at two apiece. Then Friar co-captain Chaka Daley reclaimed the lead with a goal of his own as PC led 3-2. But with time running down and the Friars just under ten minutes away from their second straight win (something they've been unable to do so far this season), the Panthers got the ball near the net and trickled through to tie this relatively high-scoring affair at 3 all, to send them into overtime.

The overtime was all Pitt. They scored a goal in the first five minutes and held on for a 4-3 win sending the Friars to their third loss in their last four games.

Of late, the Friars have been a little more prolific around the net providing some support for their goalkeepers. If they are to contend as they would like to, this trend must continue. coach Doyle, no doubt, was pleased with the fact that the team has been able to take better advantage of the opportunities that presented themselves.

Although the result on Sunday was not a win, it was indeed positive for a team with relatively low esteem to score three goals after suffering through a "drought" lately.

The Friars will conclude their three-game homestand by facing Georgetown Saturday and then Iona Monday before embarking on a make-up against five game road swing on which they will face the likes of Seton Hall and UConn.

The Friars had the best chance to become the "home cooking" of at least one of their three games they find themselves in big trouble in the standings. Already 0-3 in Big East play, the time is now for the Friars to make a statement with the upcoming games or else they'll really be looking up at the competition.

Lady Friars Rebound

Women's Lineup Finally Gels Against Non-League Opponents

by Derek Stou "95
Sports Writer

It was only a matter of time. The PC Women's soccer team is beginning to display the talent that led them to the Big East Championship a year ago. This week the Lady Friars defeated St. John's 2-1 on Saturday and the University of New Hampshire 2-0 on Tuesday. These two victories improve PC's record to respectable 3-1.

The victory versus St. John's was scoreless at half-time before the explosion came - a result of numerous shots-on-goal by the black and white. The goals came during the middle of the second half. Both goals were the result of the excellent crossing passes to the center-forward field, put in by Moira Harrington and Erin Valla respectively. Harrington's goal was most impressive as she headed the ball into the net from about ten yards out, on a perfect cross from Heather Renals. This victory was a "must-win" for this struggling club, just returning from a disappointing round-trip. "These two games were definitely a turning point," said first-year head-coach Donna Hornish. "We were coming off of a terrible game and it was time to put up or shut up. We could not afford anymore losses especially after a game like Colgate which we should not have lost in that way."

The Colgate game was a disaster for the Lady Friars whom they were evenly matched against. PC was not motivated and allowed six goals in a disastrous loss. As a result this homestand could only be a success if both games were victories. Coach Hornish realized changes were necessary to succeed. For this reason Hornish made starting line-up changes which aided in the Lady Friars starting the game with a lead. "We made line-up changes in the starting line-up. On the whole we are a better soccer team at the moment. We are much more settled in our style of play. We are also starting to play for ourselves not for anyone else and beginning to communicate all around much better."

The communication and line-up improvements were immediately evident within the New Hampshire context at home on Tuesday. PC came out and it was evident that this team was focused. They looked like a team that was playing to win, rather than not to lose. This latter attitude was the result of the loss at home versus Brown when PC was flat. PC scored quickly versus the Wildcats, compliments of Heather Renals and assisted by Erin Valla. The defensive effort was superb, as usual backed by Marilyn Pompeo and Sharon Riddle. They held UNH to only two shots-on-goal during the first half, both low percentage opportunities. The second half had UNH generating more offense than previously, but nothing significant. PC had some quality opportunities to begin the second half, but nothing to their advantage. PC finally did help themselves, as Valla scored with an assist by Moira Harrington. Valla has been a key player lately scoring in the last three Friar contests. Goalie Jody Bjergo, although not strongly challenged, has appeared more comfortable in goal during the latest homestand.

The future is beginning to look brighter for PC who now begins the most important part of their season. PC faces Boston College on Friday and St. John's on Monday to complete the Big East schedule. The Lady Friars must salvage at least one of these two games, most importantly versus St. John's who is currently last within the Big East. Coach Hornish put the next two games in perspective. "Boston College is a tough, physical and athletic team. We have to come out and play our style for the whole ninety minutes to win. St. John's is not as strong, and it is a game that we need to win." The Lady Friars return home Wednesday, October 12 and play URI.

Moira Harrington netted a head-in-goal in Saturday's 2-1 win over St. John's.

Volleyball On The Road

by Keith Christensen '96

Satisfaction. Some say the man who never roots for his team is never satisfied with its performance, regardless of how good or not they play. If this is true, then the PC. Women's volleyball team could be on its way to a great year. The Lady Friars finished the week at 2-1 by shutting Harvard out, 3-0, on Tuesday night after knocking off St. Peter's and falling to Seton Hall over the weekend. Twelve wins, three losses, and they are still not satisfied. The attitude starts with head coach Judy Ketelaar, but it does not stop there. Everyone from the senior captains, Aileen Panek and Marnie Penek, on down, wants more from the team.

Even in victory they are stot. "We came together, and we'll take the win," Penek said, following their road victory over a feisty Harvard team, which played one of its best matches of the year. It was a somewhat out-of-sorts PC squad that took the floor against Harvard. The Crimson and set, and the score was a little different than the Lady Friars had seen previously, and it caused some problems. Coach Ketelaar feels that "sometimes we get thrown out of our game," Harvard has the ability to "on and off," and not have it's usual form. They've been known to "lock in" at various moments during games, 15-12, 15-13, 15-10.

Assistant Paul Amaral stressed the need for the team to "make adjustments within the game." Already up 1-0, PC seemed to break open game 2 when they ran off six points to take a 9-4 lead. Aileen Panek bombed the Crimson for one point, and junior defensive specialist Nicole Trudeau did likewise. Junior Kelly Tooley made a diving save, and sophomore Becky Loftus drilled home a kill to cap the run.

H.U. did not lie down, however. They went on a run of the next ten points to go up 13-10. Coach Ketelaar ended a time out that her squad, and the Frieds came out with renewed determination. Junior Jocelyn Cole delivered a gorgeous spike to take a 17-14 lead, and Trudeau served up five straight points to deflate the enthusiastic crowd and win game 2 for the Friars. The black and white rode the momentum into game 3, jumping out to a 4-1 lead. After Cole ended a 3-0 run with a spike, one of her 11 kills, Provine dropped the lead, which they did not relinquish, inching away to the 15-10 final.

All hope of an H.U. comeback died when Koprivsik surrendered her body, as so many of the players do, to make an amazing sprawling save that put the Friars up 12-6. Koprivsik stepped up her game, delivering 19 kills, her highest total this year, on a superb .545 hitting %, and coming up with 14 digs. Becky Loftus also had 14 digs and 12 aces clinched the game in the top 5 in the Big East in both categories. Marnie Penek bounced back from the Seton Hall match, in which she had just 23 assists, to set the Friars 40 times.

PC began the week with a grueling 2-day road trip to New Jersey, featuring a 5 1/2 hour van ride, the Lady Friars squared off with St. Peter's. They started slowly and St. Peter's, helped by a vocal cheering section, leap out to an early 6-3 advantage. The Lady Friars stayed close through-out, and finally made their move on Jocelyn Cole's serve. Down 13-10, Koprivsik and Panek teamed up on a block, and Tooley followed with one of her 15 kills to tie it up. With the game still knotted at 13, Cole and Panek combined on a save and Tooley put it away to give PC the serve. The Friars then closed it out on two Loftus kills.

Game 2 was never close. PC ran off 6 points on Sarah Parsons serve and never looked back in the 15-8 game. Koprivsik closed the game out with an ace. PC never trailed in the final game, and Parsons' ace ended St. Peter's 4 game winning streak, 15-7.

The lone PC loss during the week came the next night in their Big East opener against Seton Hall. If the St. Peter's crowd was spritied, the large SHU crowd was downright hostile. The crowd rooted loud and rudely for SHU. PC pulled to within 6-5, on a Koprivsik kill, but got no closer in the opening game. A painful dig by Cole helped PC to within 9-6, but SHU marched steadily to the next six points, despite a PC timeout.

NHL... No More Hockey League??

by Peter J. Ketelaar '97
Sports Writer

"The players are locked-out. The season has been postponed indefinitely." This is not another saga in the 1994 baseball travesty, these were NHL commissioner Gary Betman's words this past weekend as the NHL's renaissance season was set to begin, but has been "postponed" due to the fact that the players and owners, who had played all of last year without a collective bargaining agreement, were unable to reach a settlement and we, the fans, suffer as usual.

What is a lockout? If the players are indeed locked out, why doesn't someone get them in. All this time we were under the impression that getting locked out was something that only happened to the players. However, if he had angered his wife and he was left on the doorstep, kindness. screaming WILLMA! Boy, was smart. The players showed up for their games and could not get in. The fans showed up and couldn't get in either, but they aren't locked out. No, the fans are forward to something entirely more gut wrenching and have to endure this lockout, there is no way to make up between the players and owners.

All this time, hockey day, day by day, continues to lose the fan base it built up during last year's phenomenal post-season. The story of the Cinderella story New York Rangers take the Stanley Cup after a season of heartache and happen to win the lottery, no on their first time. They are these types of memories we may not see at all this year. If I had to give a guestimate of when hockey would be back, I would say not to have another for three to four months. All the while the NHL, unlike baseball which is a consid­erably more established sport both in terms of inter­est and fans, continues to lose itself. If the league could have generated the same kind of revenue the NHL did not want to begin something it's game plan was to die, as it was dying.

Before last season, the NHL was a dead league. Sure, we knew the Gretzky's and the Lemieux's, but the rest of the sport did not generate enough interest to draw large numbers of fans to the games. Now, how many of us were bewildered around our TV sets or perhaps were even lucky enough to attend one of the many thrilling post-season games last year, who can forget the six of the Devils/Rangers series that took three overtimes? It was this type of suspenseful and entertaining play that inspired newcomers as well as diehard hockey fans in the glow of hockey's "golden age." What was to be a successful sequel to last year's season of surprise, has deteriorated into a death watch as the days pass with­out change, without a settlement.

The good thing, if there is a good thing to come of all of this, the league did not want to begin something it's game plan was to die, as it was dying. At least, we would not be teased and led-on to think we would complete a season, then be denied. The players and the league have agreed to go to a "side door," something baseball refused to do, but don't get your hopes up. The plan is that the first two weeks are definitely lost and hopefully the negotiations will lead to a settlement that would start the season on or about October 15th. Whether or not, they can reach a settlement is an en­tirely different issue.

Now starts the media war. Players and owners alike will petition the fans through the media in an effort to win them over and keep their support, thus shifting the tide. The first shot has been fired as the players took out a full-page ad in all 26 markets that encompass a team and told the fans that the players are the victims of a shameful play by the owners to rob them of this sea­son and millions in wages. If you ask me, I think they are both out of line and should get the sea­son underway as soon as possible. People have waited all summer long for the NHL to get going again and they're not sure what it is that they are waiting for. Organized sports, as a whole, have taken to the no­tion that the fans take a back seat in all this. Not so I say! The fans are at the heart of the situation and am indeed the ones who are suffering.
