The Results of the Assaults

by Theresa Edo '96

The time has come for the PC community to take the next step. In the past three weeks since the reports of the three off-campus sexual assualts were released, reactions to them have been immediate and widespread. Stills and in Eagle Square, a relatively uneventful first semester. Now, preventive and protective measures are being taken to inform everyone of the situation.

The Office of Student Services and Student Congress have developed a combination of attempts to get the facts out to the public. Flier box notices have been put up. There has been an increased and more precise usage of the Safety Bulletin Board (outside of the Student Congress office), which pinpoints exact locations of assaults and burglaries on a map of the area. The board is updated as soon as incidents are reported to the school.

There is a Problem and We Must Find a Solution

by Bridget Hughes '96

Whether it's for a beer at Louie's or necessities at CVS, most PC students have ventured off-campus for one thing or another. When heading to the area which is referred to as Eagle Square, many students accept the area for what it is, rarely thinking of how the area looks or how unsafe the neighborhood is. But the fact is, students help the businesses in Eagle Square, so the area should be a safer place to go.

Providence College can help with the problem. But first, the college needs to understand what is going on. With the authority sitting behind the desk, they just don't see the problem. Unfortunately, it is the students and the merchants who do see what goes on. A group of students walking to CVS can easily run into two people on a corner transacting a drug deal. Students heading down to Club Eagles can easily witness a fight. Something is wrong with this picture. Obviously, the area needs help.

Most of the merchants in the Eagle Square area would like to see the area improved, but they just don't have the money to put their ideas into action. One merchant, Michael Corelli, Jr., owner of Phase 1 Hair Studio, would like to see the area improved. His theory is, "If the neighborhood goes down, then the businesses go down."

Corelli has tried very hard to make the area around his hair salon look attractive and presentable. He tries to cater to the students and the locals. One way in which he has done this is by frequently changing the decor in his store.

Transcending into a other problem is the problem of student parking.

Students are being forced to leave their cars on the back "black lot" rather than going to the west side street parking lot. The black lot is often filled with cars, while the side parking lot is often empty. This is because the student parking garage is still under construction, and the students are being forced to leave their cars on what is effectively a "parking lot" rather than a "parking garage."

This is not the only problem students are facing. The Student Congress is working hard to improve the situation. Recently, they have been working on a new parking system that will make it easier for students to park their cars. This system will allow students to park in designated areas, which will make it easier for them to find a parking spot.

In addition, the Student Congress is working with the merchants in the area to improve the situation. They are trying to work with the merchants to make the area more attractive and presentable. They are also working with the police department to make sure that the area is safe.

The Student Congress is working hard to improve the situation, and they are making progress. The students are encouraged to keep an eye on the situation and to report any problems they may encounter. They are also encouraged to support the Student Congress as they work to improve the area.

every night," said Kara Gosart '96, an off-campus resident.
The Office of Off-Campus Housing, however, does not deal with students' personal reports. Carolyn Ryan, the Director of the office, explained that they deal more with tenant-landlord disputes. If problems of safety arise because doors and windows do not lock or exterior lighting does not work, then the office gets involved. Even faulty doorbells are potential dangers because it forces residents to leave doors unlocked for unheard visitors. Ryan said that packets were sent out to all off-campus residents at the beginning of the semester outlining safety precautions, but all should be reminded of simple things such as pulling window shades at night and putting lamps on timers.

There has also been some apprehension about the round-the-clock security in McIntyre Hall. Dennis Del Gizzo, Assistant Director of Residence Life, stressed that it is because of an unrelated incident involving one student. On the issue of safety, he feels that students should be conscious of where they are walking at all times.

"We can tell the students what is happening off-campus," said Fr. Mc'hall, "but we can't take them by the hand."

Disciplinary Measures

A judicial hearing was held on October 19 to consider the following charge:
- standards of conduct established by Providence College

The student was asked to move by the police; which he refused. In addition the student taunted the police.

The following penalty was determined:
- disciplinary probation for one semester

Best of Both Worlds

A special dinner held on October 25 for Women's Studies represented the culmination of three years of hard work and dedication by various female members of the Providence College faculty and administration. The celebration centered on women and the acceptance of the new Women Studies minor. Three years ago, in June of 1991 Dr. Jane Lurin Perel of the English department attended a seminar at Boston College entitled "Women Studies programs in Catholic Colleges". This seminar made Dr. Perel realize the potential Providence College has for addressing women's issues and the impact of women in history and civilization.

The attendees were numerous. The women present were all highly influential members of our community. The first woman introduced by the acting director, Dr. Perel, was Sally Thibodeau. She helped bring about the start of this program by providing access to administration. Although, she was not called upon to do very much. "I help people do the things they like best. But this group did not need much advice."

The program draws on a wide range of faculty from many different departments to organize its curriculum. Dr. Donna McCaffrey of the History Department will be teaching about Women of the Fourteenth century. Dr. Jane Lurin Perel of the English Department will be teaching a course on Contemporary Poets, focusing on female poets and issues concerning women. Dr. Debros Johnson of the Art History Department currently teaches a course-Contemporary Arts and Ideas: Women Studies. Dr. Elaine Chaita, of the Linguistics Department will be teaching Women's Film of the 1930s and 1940s. Dr. Charolette O'Kelly and Dr. Mary Anne Sedney will join together to teach an Introduction to Women Studies.

Dr. Bernadette Topel of the Theology department will be teaching Women in the Christian Religion. Dr. Particcia Lawker of the Modern Languages Department will teach French Feminism. And Dr. Carol Crafts of the Biology department may teach a course on Women in Science. Together, these women will begin to re-invent and re-introduce women's role in history and society.

Dr. Sedney is quite intent on making our campus a more comfortable place for women. She is interested in "finding out what it is about all women colleges that is so good for women, and try to infuse those qualities into Providence College and make it the best of both worlds."

Another Alcohol Awareness Day?

by Judith Colonna '95

News Writer

Too many of you may not have realized that last October 17th, October 21st, was National College Alcohol Awareness week. The focus of this week was a part of it. During that time period, there was a table set up in lower Slavin displaying various facts and figures about alcohol related incidents in and around the PC area. These pamphlets and flyers, however, weren't mysteriously placed on the table. The display was the work of the PC Alcohol Awareness Committee.

The purpose of the display was to inform the students of the importance of alcohol awareness on campus. The week of information was not the only thing on the agenda. For the upcoming year, there will be numerous events planned to get the committee's theme across: "How many students have been hospitalized for over-drinking?"

The same panic was plaguing the Campus Police Fall. Juniors feared that with two new apartment buildings on campus, they wouldn't be able to live off-campus. "PC students are enrolled in one of the best teaching programs in this region, and it is second to none. The graduates of PC are characterized by knowledge, understanding, a strong work ethic, and a sense of caring for their students. You can be proud of PC. As an administrator I've never heard anything negative about the teachers who came from PC and I wish you the satisfaction of being a good teacher."

One of the recipients, Lori Capen, said, "I was honored to be part of such a positive event at PC. People always seem to be concentrating on the negative at PC, but the task must be made. It made me think about how a, as a teacher, students could change people's lives for the better."

Squatters rights are more relaxed this years than any other year. This flexibility has encouraged more students to stay on-campus.

According to Del Gizzo, "We would have to tell the college that we guarantee all the rooms [in on-campus apartments] will be filled. Obviously, the Residence Life Office can't make that kind of promise."

Squatters rights are even more relaxed than they have been in the past. This flexibility may encourage more students to stay on-campus. According to Del Gizzo, squatters rights are more relaxed this year than they have been. This flexibility will allow the college to meet the demand for on-campus housing. The Residence Life Office will most likely fill these spots with sophomores rather than tell seniors they can't move off-campus.

Clinton Trip to Mid-East
Israel and Jordan, after almost a month of war, signed a treaty yesterday in a formal setting held on their desert border. President Clinton was among many world leaders to attend the ceremony, that while filled with hope, had a back drop of fear for possible terrorist attacks.

During his four-day trip to the Middle East, President Clinton plans on meeting with to Presidents Hosni Mubarak, Syrian President Hafiz Assad, and King Faisal of Saudi Arabia. He hopes to encourage Syria to make peace with Israel.

President Clinton is also scheduled to address the Israeli Knesset, and the Jordanian Parliament. Finally, on Saturday, he is scheduled to meet with American troops stationed in Kuwait.

Guilliani Endorses Cuomo
Politics definitely makes strange bedfellows, and his year's New York Governor's race is no different. In a surprising move, New York's Republican Mayor Rudolph Guilliani endorsed Democratic incumbent Governor Mario Cuomo, over the Republican challenger State Senator George Pataki.

In announcing his decision to cross party lines, Guilliani stated that Governor Cuomo was the best candidate and would represent the interests of New York City. He went on to comment that Sen. Pataki had almost always voted against the interests of the city while in the New York Legislature.

Pataki showed no sign of resentment, and commented that Guilliani has done an excellent job in his first year as Mayor. At press time, Pataki holds an 8 point lead over Cuomo, according to a New York Post poll released Monday.

Eagle Square
This is the cafe he started that is located next to his hair studio. He started the Jail House Cafe which serves coffee and bagels to offer a place to sit and relax with their friends. It is just one of the many ways that he wants to improve the Eagle Square neighborhood.

Phase I Hair Studios used to be on the corner of Admiral and Candlestick, a firehouse.

Corcelli moved his business way back in 1984 when he thought that being in the center of Eagle Square would enhance business. He feels that the neighborhood has changed, and it is why he has not moved his business out of the area.

Corcelli brings to the area back what it used to be. There used to be better shops and restaurants. Corcelli feels that if there were more places like Chinese restaurants or music stores, then the area would start to improve. There would be more things for PC students and the locals to enjoy. They would start coming to the area to shop. The area, not just for the lack of nothing else to do.

It seems that so many people talk about improving the neighborhood. Yet, with all the talk, there is nothing being done. Corcelli thinks that it is easy for people to sit around and talk and plan what needs to be done. However, the only way things will improve is when people start talking and start interacting with what's going on.

Corcelli thinks that if Providence College touches bases with what village goes on, then the area will start to improve. But, if the college just sits back and ignores the problem, then nothing will get accomplished. In order to make improvements the bad needs to be recognized. Then we can see a change for the better. Michael Corcelli wants to change the neighborhood for the better. But, he can't do it alone.

Father Smith has approximately 75 guests at the barbecue will be held at 4 pm on Savin lawn. All students are encouraged to attend and join the celebration.

Unintelligent Electorate On A Roll

A recent New York Times article reported "These are not subtle times in American politics." But then when have the words subtlety and politics ever logically coexisted in the same concept? The current mid-term election campaigns are re-exposing a painful fact regarding American politics and their politics. The fact is Americans like their issues simple, catchy, and easily digestible. Topics must conform, in length, to predetermined network sound bite opportunities and should not provoke thought, only emotion.

There can be no doubt that some mid-term Senate and House of Representative races are indicative of more than the expected off-year losses normally suffered by the party occupying the White House. A Time/CNN poll conducted on September 22, 1994 indicated that 48% of adult Americans were more likely to vote for challengers than incumbents this November 8th. Why?

The answer lies within the aforementioned analysis of modern American politics and is characterized by a older phenomenon James Madison was acutely aware of when he was drafting the Constitution. Average lower, middle, and upper-class Americans do not have the interest, inclination, or the intellect to delve into complex political decisions. It is for this reason that representatives are elected. Unfortunately, since the advent of the mass-media, the American public has become less informed by the very tool that should have made them more so. This "dumbing-down" of issues by the media, combined with an impressionable and easily persuaded populace has resulted in the unthinkible prospect that the Republican party may soon control the Congress.

Two years ago this very same electorate chose Bill Clinton and charged him with the task of making changes in Washington D.C. Out were the old partisan politics and in, for the first time in two years, an addictive and legislative wave carried by the same party. Only two years have passed since then and the sheep who elect officials in this country have latched on to the Republican party's rhetoric and their "Contract for America." Yet, there is a certain level of the Democratic theme of "Change" and "revigorating America." Instead they now prey on the public's fear. Some current Republican fueled issues include the following: "Evil immigrants are stealing your jobs," "Pollalyze, Kraus could have been your daughter," and "government run health care is Squalor." The American public is eating it up.

In Virginia, convicted perjurer Oliver North is waging the flag and running ads which exploit the Lebanese hostages. In Massachusetts, squaky clear millionaire Mitt Romney is peddling fear about crime and incumbent Ted Kennedy's opposition to the death penalty. And in California, Mike Huffington is running on a campaign has been described as nihilistic. If the American electorate chooses to buy these farcical snow jobs, they deserve the consequences.

A little subtlety in politics would be nice for a change. Unfortunately, Newt Gingrich, Alan Simpson, Jesse Helms, Bob Dole and the rest of the Republican saysayers won't have it any other way.

Bomber Doesn't Deserve New Trial

by Robert Mendes '95

Editorial Writer

Questions are being raised in the case of one of the World Trade Center bombers. It looks as though the case of Ahmed M. Ajaj may be heading back to court in order to examine if he deserves another trial. Defenders of Ajaj are claiming that there is not enough legitimate evidence to keep him in jail. They are arguing that all the evidence used to convict him is circumstantial. Prosecutors are arguing that the evidence clearly links Ajaj to the bombing conspiracy and that he was justly convicted. You decide.

The defense of Ajaj rests on two points. First, they could not have participated in the actual bombing because he was in jail when it happened. Second, Ajaj's relationship with the mastermind of the bombing, Ramzi Ahmed Yousef, is not as close as prosecutors argue. It would seem that Ajaj was wrongly convicted. However, the case is not that simple. Ajaj was arrested on Sep-

The Cowl 5
by John J. O’lohan ’93

Editorial Writer

Dear Kelsey, congratulations on your birth. I know it seems weird that I would congratulate you for being born but as you get older you will know what I am talking about. Just in case anything happens to me, I want to leave you with some advice that will help you get through life.

The most important thing in your life is your family. Friends come and go but your family will always be around. When the going gets tough, the only people you will be able to count on are your family members. You must learn to appreciate your mother, father, and the future brother and sisters at a very young age because if you don’t appreciate your family when you are young, then you probably won’t when you’re old.

Watch out for people who want you to do things that you don’t want to. You will bump into so many people that don’t believe in you. There will be a plethora of times where your peers will want you to do something with them so that you can’t do it because they know what they are about to do is wrong.

You will spend at least 17 years in the classroom, so be on guard against teachers who throw in sound bite information about their social and political beliefs. At a young age you won’t understand the amount of influence your teachers will have on you. If you can be good, just be on your guard.

Discipline yourself. It starts with cleaning your room. The littlest things you do will enhance your person and you will start to develop a good work ethic. Most of the time parents will be very lazy because their mothers and fathers never made them do anything. Don’t wait for your parents to tell you to do something. Take the initiative. Besides, as grandma says, “good kids get rewards.”

Don’t think that when your parents yell at you it is because they don’t like you. When your mother and father discipline you, they are doing it for your own good. Not to long ago they were a lot younger and they remember how it was to be young. Most of your friends will think that they know more than their parents, when in fact they don’t. Everyone has their own unique life experiences are more valuable to you than anything you will be told.

Read everything you want and you will learn.

Always appreciate everything that you have. Every time you wake up in the morning, be thankful that you have another day here on earth. Don’t become like so many other people that take life for granted. Just the fact that you made it out of those wobbly and million’s of your peers didn’t because they were called “unwanted,” should make you want to stand up for all human life from the unborn to the aged. You must do it because you can. They are smooth talkers but when the time comes to take responsibility for their actions they don’t. If the time you are my age, they will probably have full blown sex education classes in pre-school. Don’t make the same mistakes that millions upon millions of people have made before you. Remember to be a good human, take care of your body, and remember, there are only a handful of people that will.

Ladies, the stone age is back. Our dream of equal rights and equal treatment has been taken by the people at the hands of our judicial system. Once again, we are viewing our children and our future brothers and sisters at a very young age because if you don’t appreciate your family when you are young, then you probably won’t when you’re old.

In other words, testosteronering, a raging temper after being bated, is acceptable reasons for murder your woman. Judge Cahill obviously doesn’t view this sort of homicide as murder, but he must impose a sentence that will keep the law, and unfortunately it is his job to uphold legislation.

Perhaps the most disturbing editorial writer for the New York Times, compared his stupid remark to a hypothetical case where a man is accused for having stolen money from a cash machine. She wrote that Judge Cahill should have expressed concern that the defendant was a young, first-time offender, and that there was a chance that the defendant could be rehabilitated.

However, this is very evident is the case of Sandra Peacock’s life. Her gender was overwhelming her. Not surprisingly, this decision came out of the same Baltimore County court system that ruled that a 16 year old girl, completely intoxicated, was legally responsible for having sex with her 23 year old boss. This is nauseating, and if anyone would like to argue that she was probably ask-
One Student's Fight With Alcohol

We Need Jesus

To the Editor:

You may ask yourself what happened to me? This is about one student's journey through college as an athlete. My first two years at PC are pretty much a blur. When I arrived here as a freshman I was just about the same as everyone else. I had the same experiences as the rest of you did throughout high school and thought that I was ready to take on the world; hey, I was even a varsity athlete in the Big East. Big deal. Soon after getting in school I found out just how easy it was to blow off work and to go to the bars or stay in and drink. Nobody cared what you did or when you did it. I started going to class drunk and practicing drunk. It even went to the extreme of Baker having a final so drunk that I did not remember talking to the professor afterwards. But enough about what you already know about college. Needless to say my grades and athletic performance suffered. My G.P.A. for both semesters was far below a 2.0. For those of you who don't know what that means, it means, for example, that I was spending on alcohol relatively to how much money you have for the year. Remember that alcohol use is progressively more you drink, the more you need to drink, and then the more you need to drink. The final reason for my writing this article is because this is coming from a student with a drinking problem and not an administrator. Hopefully the students will see the opportunity to examine themselves and do what is right.

If you would like to respond either positively or negatively to this article or want to know where to get help, please send your comments to the box number (if desired). (No names please), to box 8011. This is entirely confidential.

I look forward to your comments.

To the Editor:

On Thursday, October 13, I was studying in the Phillips Memorial Library, burning the midnight oil. In light of the recent assailants in the PC neighborhood and a strong concern for personal safety, I sought the services of the PC Student Security Escort. As I exited the library, I asked the male student sitting at the escort desk if he would mind walking me to Bedford Hall. He replied by explaining that when only one person is present, he was obligated to watch the desk and was unable to escort me. I failed to see logic behind his explanation since I had only passed three other individuals in the library and a librarian was on duty. I didn't have the patience or energy to argue with the security escort or hold him totally responsible. I wondered what supervisor had given him such instructions. I was totally disgusted. I walked back to my apartment. I had just been denied my basic right to security. However, I must tell you that I fail to see the safety of two people walking to destination "A" just to have the escort walk back by himself.

So, my view that the gentlemens sitting at the doors of the library with orange security vest were actually paid to do their home work was dubious. I just hope that the next time I need an escort home, and there is only one person there, he will at least send me his orange vest.

Sincerely,

Anne Leegan

Viva Angelo!

Take away the dripping candles, the soft, velvety caresses of the violins, and the exotic tuxedos and the waiter's proper backhs, and you have a casual Italian restaurant with great food. In a word, you have Angelo's, the captivating Italian diner up on Federal St. to the right of Angelo's Restaurant. The dinner is a fairly honest price. Along with a menu ranging from antipasto to veal to cow intestines (tripe), Angelo's also offers unmistakably prompt service in an atmosphere where everyone is your friend. Overall, this is a fun place to eat a good meal.

So, it's a crisp but moist Saturday afternoon, the tender golden leaves nestled in the autumn trees staring pungently down at me. The dark clouds above were encasing the land around us like an afghan, as myself and my aptly named lunchdate, Megan McKenna, walked into a jam-packed Angelo's. Crowded as it was, their efficient seating provided us with a table quickly.

Now it was time to eat. First, some fresh-looking bread was placed on our table, as it is in every good Italian restaurant. Both Megan and I then started with a very tasty Italian noodle soup, which served as an excellent opening to the meal. "It's simple, but it has a very gripping and attractive flavor," Megan said in full comment of the soup. She was right, actually, as I also thought this appetizer to be extremely pure and delicious — a fabulous beginning indeed.

We then moved onto the main course, which was the part of the dinner that convinced me for sure that Angelo's is about quality food. My counterpart ordered the cheese ravioli, luscious portions of ricotta cheese piped into smooth pockets of pasta, generously encased in a rich marinara sauce. It seemed like Megan enjoyed them very much since there stood only a mass of nothingness on her plate when she was finished. I've been out to eat with her a number of times, and in all these instances, I've never seen her clean her plate like she did at Angelo's.

By the way, I enjoyed a very good veal Parmesan with a side of spaghetti. This featured an honest portion of pasta, surrounding a monster-sized veal cutlet engulfed in mozzarella cheese and sauce. I consider myself to be an adequately qualified critic of veal parmesan, since I have ordered it at just about every quality Italian restaurant all over the country. Therefore, possessing my veal expertise, I will simply say that this dish was among the best I've had. Unlike a tough and chewy piece of veal that gets caught in between your teeth, and you have to fiddle and fool with its flabby existence just to get a good bite, this call's breast was cooked to perfection, tender and juicy with a crispy batter coating its delicious presence. To put it bluntly, it melted in my mouth like a soft and beautiful French kiss. But, I'll get off the sexual subject of myself making out with a piece of veal so I can give you my final thoughts.

$15.19. That's how much it cost. $15.19. Not for one meal. Not for two entrees, but for the whole dining experience. Drinks, songs, and two heaping main courses for the price of two pizzas. And this wasn't $15.19 worth of so-so food. This was Angelo's — not a rite 5 star gourment Italian restaurant, but not just a whole-in-the-wall diner either. A true B+. So please do yourself a favor. Take a break from the revolting confines of Raycaf (it's a meal), and treat yourself to some pure, honest Italian food.

Jesus Lives

by Mark Cynbulski '95
A&E Editor

For over a decade, two very tall, skinny Scottish brothers named Jim and William Reid have been belting out lines of thousands of gothic, brooding songs. Better known as The Jesus and Mary Chain, the Reid brothers are unique in that they have become more acoustic. The band offered a fantastic set of acoustic songs and stellar vocals, proving that their music was not limited to the electric setting.

In Concert

Jesus Lives offers a truly memorable concert experience. The band's incredible wall of sound made the JAMC's set a headliner. For the band, the key was in selecting the songs from the new album, devoting much of the show to classic material. The band made an effort to keep the fans happy with the inclusion of a song from the band's new album, "Dethroned," and by repeating a few of their older songs. The band's acoustic set included some excellent guitar work that added depth and texture to their sound. The band's acoustic set was a breath of fresh air, with songs that showcased the band's ability to create beautiful melodies.

Fictional Frenzy

slashing, homosexual rape, and brain matter scattered on the back seat of an old Nova, those who obviously did not know what to expect from filmmaker Quentin Tarantino simply left the building.

Oh well, their loss. They missed the best movie I've seen this year.

Pulp Fiction, Tarantino's latest release, provides the audience with a slice of Los Angeles organized crime. John Travolta and Samuel L. Jackson are the two hit men. Bruce Willis is the hard working good-guy who tries to pull a fast one on their boss, played by Ving Rhames. Uma Thurman is Rhamen's coke-compulsive wife, whom Travolta must take out for a night on the town. Harvey Keitel has to clean up a headless corpse that Jackson and Travolta bring to Tarantino's house. Eric Stoltz and a manypierced Rosanna Arquette deal Travolta his heroin. Christopher Walken gives a youngster his long-dead father's gold watch. Somewhere in here there's a plot.

The director and co-writer of Pulp Fiction, Tarantino wraps shocking scenes around a non-linear plot line. The plot is divided into four primary sections which seem at first to be only slightly related to each other. Because the sections are not presented in chronological order, the plot line doesn't really come together until the final fifteen minutes of the two-and-one-half hour marathon. The result is a bouncing back and forth between comedy and romance and drama and action.

Of these four genres, the movie's strongest is its comedy. Jackson and Travolta are perfect for each other, exchanging ingenius conversation every time they get an opportunity. Travolta and Thurman perform a hilarious dancet at a 1950's restaurant (an establishment that comes complete with '50's movie star impersonators waiting on their patrons).

Keitel is priceless as a classy guy, doing a messy job, and Walken gives an uproariously funny monologue about surviving a P.O.W. camp in Vietnam. I don't even want to get into the silly haircuts. The violence, however, is not for everyone. The looks and puns are sexual, drug related, per-verse, and dare I say, tasteless. Audiences who do not have a problem with that will most likely have the time of their lives.

In addition to its great comedic quality, every individual performance in the movie is spectacular. I thoroughly enjoyed Jackson's character, and gained respect for his abilities. Pulp Fiction may also jump start Travolta's career, which has been in a virtual stall since 1983. The film wouldn't be nearly as good without even one character absent from the roll.

Pulp Fiction also makes terrific use of its violent, adventurous moments. In the 150 minutes of film, there are only about ten brutal moments, but I was on the verge of an anxiety attack the entire time. It is the anticipation of violence, particularly in the section of the movie that focuses on Willis, that makes efficient use of a few gory scenes.

The secret to the success of Pulp Fiction, though, is Tarantino himself. His use of unusual camera angles and lighting effects keeps the audience tense. His acting is superb as Jimmy — a cranky, vulgar man who is awakened one morning to find a headless corpse in his garage. Most important of all are his writing skills. Every line of the movie was peculiarsome of the situations they were spoken in were downright strange. As a result, even the slow parts of Pulp Fiction avoided being boring.

While Pulp Fiction is not for everyone, it is a wonderful movie for all interested in Tarantino's bizarre style of filmmaking. It is also ideal for college-age viewers, who may walk in with a bit more of an open mind than other patrons. It is Tarantino's finest work to date, and may be the most influential and Successful movie of this fall.

Health Notes:
"Battling the Bug"

by Cindy Jacobson
Student Health Center

Do mild semester exams have an impact in the Student Health Center? Yes! With increased stress and decreased sleep, resistance gets low and illnesses take over. Last week and this week our numbers increased as cold and flu (influenza) prevailed and students were trying to study with a "heavy" head, a runny nose, cough and body aches - a miserable picture!

Cold and flu are two separate maladies but share some similarities. A cold is more localized with annoying head, throat and possibly chest symptoms lasting 7-10 days. Flu is more of a systemic illness characterized by general body aches and fever lasting 1-2 days, accompanied by some of the cold symptoms. Both are caused by viruses for which we can offer only palliative treatment. There is no medicine that can cure; antibiotics are not effective here.

For the most part, non-prescription medications can relieve symptoms and many of them are all-in-one treatments. Take treatment for only the symptoms you have. Read directions and information carefully. Check for side effects. A combination cough/decongestant medicine plus a "cold and sinus" tablet would mean you were taking a duplication of medication. Tylenol, and similar medication and aspirin relieve aches and pains and decrease fever only. Fluids always remain important to prevent dehydration, keep mucous membranes moist (important for the throat and chest) and keep secretions liquefied. For complete cure, time and good health habits are the remaining factors. Physician care may or may not be necessary if symptoms disappear.

Bacterial illness such as strep throat, sinusitis, bronchitis and pneumonia need evaluation by a physician and possible treatment with an antibiotic. Antibiotics can be combined with symptomatic relief medications plus fluids, time and rest.

PREVENTION is stressed especially in our environment where living is close, over sharing is common and fatigue is frequent. Most precautionary techniques are basic common sense and include:
- Don't share utensils, drinking cups or soda cars
- Wash hands frequently
- Keep hands away from eyes, nose, mouth
- Cough or sneeze into shoulder, not hands or several tissues to be disposed of immediately
- Avoid direct contact with those who have symptoms of illness
- Eat a well balanced diet each day - using the 4 food groups
- Get enough rest each day - "catching up" doesn't always work
- Get regular exercise - providing you have an o.k. from your physician

Important Club News

Two Cowl articles about the library published earlier this semester attempted to respond to frequently expressed student concern regarding the adequacy of the library's collection of books and journals to support student research. However, other concerns about the library were also raised in the survey of student opinion conducted last semester, and these require a response as well.

Noise in the building is perhaps the most frustrating of these problems, both for students and library staff. Those who have worked in the library for a number of years know that the problem is not as serious as it once was, largely because, on an average evening, there are fewer people in the building than there were ten years ago. (We know this because we take regular head counts.) This reduction in the evening population is apparent due to the greater availability of other places on the campus to study.

Nevertheless, we are aware that the level of noise still reaches unacceptable high levels at times, interfering with students' ability to concentrate. There is a library staff member, called a proctor, in the building five evenings a week whose primary responsibility is to ensure the maintenance of a quiet environment. Any unacceptable noise is urged to see a representative from these clubs to discuss their future under Chapter 5 of the Student Conduct Constitution.

A Valuable Experience Over Christmas Break

by Kathy Reid '95
Career Assistant

Wow! Can you believe the semester is already half way over? Believe it or not it is, and soon it will be time to go home for our Christmas break. What will you be doing during the break? I have a great idea that is not only advantageous to your career planning but is also fun. It's the Providence College Alumni Shadowing Program.

The shadowing program, sponsored by the Career Planning and Internship Services of the Student Development Center, is coordinated by Mrs. Debra Santostefano, Assistant Director, and Mrs. Kathleen Clarkin, Director. The PC shadowing program is now in its sixth year, and it is becoming more and more popular with both students and alumni. The program provides you with the opportunity to observe PC alumni in the workplace, obtain valuable career information, and even make important contacts that could help you in the future. Last year 94 alumni were selected by 102 students and since many students met with more than one alumni, 143 matches were actually made. Shadowing opportunities were available in 10 states, Washington D.C., and even Hong Kong.

What is it like to be a doctor, a social worker, or an accountant? The shadowing program is your chance to find out what it is like in the real world. Last year there were 148 opportunities to choose from. There was quite a variety of career fields including: public relations, advertising, education, law, finance, and health administration. One student from the class of '95 was offered a job opportunity upon graduation because of her shadowing experience. So, no more excuses. There are over 100 opportunities waiting for you to take advantage of. Besides, you can actually come back from Christmas break and say you did something useful!

Students interested in becoming a participant in the shadowing program must attend one of the many information sessions available. The workshops will be held in Slavin 203 on Tuesday 11/1 from 9:00-12:00; Tuesday 11/7 from 9:00-12:00; Tuesday 11/14 from 9:00-12:00; Tuesday 11/21 from 9:00-12:00; Tuesday 11/28 from 9:00-12:00; and Thursday 11/30 from 2:00-3:00.

Unless You Are Going to Hibernate this Winter...

Winter is quickly approaching and I know the transition can sometimes be a difficult one; therefore, I have come up with a few reminders:

1. Stop walking to class and take the PC Shuttle.
2. Change your cotton sheets to flannel ones.
3. Stop laying out at the Grotto and go to Fryer Tanning. (What would they do without the vain Providence College students?)
4. Stop getting up ten minutes before class and start getting up twenty minutes before class to dry your hair. (I think there may be some guys in this category.)
5. The majority of the PC students stop reading the summer J. Crew catalog and start reading the winter J. Crew catalog.
6. Change the top of your Jeep from a soft top to a hard top. (What is the percentage of PC students with Jeeps anyway?)
7. PC students stop wearing their J. Crew button downs and barn jackets and start wearing their J. Crew flannels and anoraks. (I know...I know not everyone)
8. Stop barbecuing and start using the stove. (Does anyone really use their stove?)
9. Stop drinking daiquiris and start drinking rum and Coke. (I don’t think this one is very accurate...who ever stopped drinking rum?)
10. Stop jumping from party to party and start setting up where it is warm.
11. It’s time to throw those Tevas in the closet and pull out the boots. (That’s going to be a tough one. I know how much you all love your Tevas...I know...not everyone?)
12. Instead of NOT watching professional baseball, we can NOT watch professional ice hockey.
13. Stop wearing cotton socks and start wearing wool socks.
14. Stop having money in the bank and start looking forward to those holiday checks.
15. Stop hooking up outside of your dorms...and start—oh I forgot we’ve got co-ed dorms now. I guess that problem is solved. (It’s great to know that there are a few schools left that uphold moral Catholic traditions.)
16. Stop going to the cafe for social hour and start going when you are really hungry (especially those poor students that live on lower campus).
17. Stop going on Friday night trips to Emerald Square Mall and start going on Friday night trips to the Civic Center.
18. Stop drinking Dunkin Donuts iced-coffee and start drinking Dunkin Donuts hot coffee.
19. Change the buckle on your berks so that you can wear wool socks underneath.
20. Finally, we will stop wishing that we had the fall Jewish Holidays off and start hoping that we get a few more snow days this year.

I know everyone will make this transition smoothly; but if you see that tall guy who works in the athletic department and wears shorts all year round and pulls his socks up to his knees, help him out and tell him to put some clothes on.

This Is Halloween!!

by Tina Kloster '95 Features Editor

Well, it's that time of year again. Soon, the big orange guy will begin his ascent from the pumpkin patch and children across the country will start to rejoice and sing pumpkin songs. You may think you understand this ghoulish holiday, but there are stories behind Halloween customs that few people know about.

Pumpkin carving:

Once upon a time, a long time ago, on October 31st, some primitive town lost their electricity. Since they were too ar-chaic to figure out how to turn it back on, the general response was, "Oh man, it's gonna be dark." So, the members of the town called a meeting to decide what to do. In compliance with fire safety rules, they knew open flames were almost as bad as an unattended microwave, so candles were out. Mr. Doby suggested that they follow the sun at the end of each day, but since he was a little looney, his idea was voted down. Everyone began to lose hope. But suddenly, Mr. Davit said, "I have an idea! You know those pumpkins that we've been making pies out of? Well, why don't we cut off the tops, scoop out the goop, cut scary faces in them, put a candle inside, and use them as lights?"

There was a moment of tension because the people who liked pie thought it was a cruel plan, but soon they were convinced. They all liked the mood lighting and so much fun on Halloween every year, the adults began to get a little jealous. They didn't want candy (they could always swipe that when the kids were sleeping) and the jack o'lantern thing wasn't that much fun. With these sentiments in mind, the Roommothers/fathers of America Foundation held a conference and developed an amendment to their constitution: "In addition to serving apple cider and dis- gustingly sweet cupcakes with candy corn on top ev-ery Halloween, we hereby agree that donuts shall be suspended from the ceiling with string in each classroom. Each child will be told to eat the donut without the aid of his/her hands. The donuts must have messy

Frier's Flicks II

by Mat Bunnell '95 Art Director/Editor

One thing I've learned over the years is that a flip through cable stations is always a surefire remedy to snap a bad case of writer's block (and a cold shower is a surefire remedy to snap a bad case of jock itch). So, I rubbed the remote, crossed my fingers (as well as my legs) and sat back in my recliner. As I perused through my 68 channels (OK...since it makes 68), I noticed a little series that was hard to come by, while a good sequel is, more often than not, a movie. In the grand tradition of Weekend at Bernies II, Look Who's Talking II, and the whole Police Academy series, I present another installment of stupidity, which I'll call Frier's Flicks II: Bull Goes to Hell. Just to explain, the original article took movie titles and related them to...well, you'll see. And without further ado...Lights! (Beergoggler in the A.M.: 'Turn off, turn 'em off!!'), Camera! (Don't worry, honey, I won't show this tape to anybody), Ac-tion!! (Slap!!) Drive me home...and away we go...

Phineas: The story of O.J. Simpson's defense team and their effort to get The Juice loose. Hey O.J! Your DNA matches the blood found at the scene, you have killed your defense lineup, and still claims that the evidence is circumstantial, where ya gonna go? No, not Disneyland... sorry, you're going to Don't Drive the Scat Land (a.k.a. Jail).

Backdraft-Hungry? Wanna grab a bite to eat? Watch out for Taco Bell. You'll go in makin' a run for the border and leave makin' a run for the john. Whiheeweeeee, that stuff goes right through ya, no?

Laser Trucker-PC's own Dickey simpkins, "The Moon Man," hits the jackpot by sinking a 15 million dollar contract with the Bulls. Hey, Dickey... remember me, we went to school together...yeah, PC...well, I was wondering, could you spot me a hundred bucks? How about Michael Jordan's autograph? Tickets...? A ball?!...A date with one of the cheerleaders?...Hey, Dickey, you going...? Right... how about just a cup of Gatorade?...Dickey? The Fugitive-I don't quite understand how that neighbor- borhood felon who was found hiding in somebody's bush got away from the cops...he did the. The sus-pected was eventually caught after he was spotted at the Dunkin' Donuts on Admiral Street. Smart move, buddy, you forgot the first rule of cop-and-do...you're gonna be on the run from the law make sure you don't get the upper hand.

Lean on Me-you know those nights when, for some reason, one or more of your friends gets tanked and by the end of the night, they're a stumbling,umbling,mumbling mess. Just make sure that there's a designated walker or who knows who you'll end up with. (The next morning: "What did you say we are again? Unbridge? That's still in Rhode Island, right?

Don't mess with Rhonda this weekend...and whatever you do, don't ask her to take off her mask if she bests the costume party you're attending...Whoa...knock...knock>> Hey, Jeff, what's taking you so long there?

The Internship Opportunity: Building Your Future Today

by Juliette S. Marchioli '95 Features Editor

Upon meeting Sean Peacock '95, one assumes, based on initial impressions, that he is a typical PC senior: a Marketing major from Hanover, Mass, with one more year of freedom as an undergraduate, gearing up to enter into the world of futile job searching. Sean is an ordinary student except that amazingly, the last part of this statement doesn't apply to him. He won't have to go through the headache of sending out too many resumes and receiving just as many rejection letters. He won't be writing law school essays or dreading the upcoming GRE's. He won't even have to worry about applying for a job or lose sleep wondering when his first paycheck will come from. In fact, Sean already has a job and loves it: a job he secured in his junior year through an internship with Northwestern Mutual Life.

Northwestern Mutual Life, an Insurance Company, which dates back to 1857 and is the number one company in the country, has developed a missionary college program in 1967 to provide the opportunity for students to examine first-hand, not only the industry but to expose them to the opportunities. Over 10,000 undergraduates nationwide have taken part in this program since its inception, with approximately 500 students recruited every year. Out of this total, one in three chooses to become a full-time agent after graduation. Sean is one of them.

It was in the second semester of his junior year that Sean found out about the internship offered by Northwestern, thanks mostly to Barbara O'Neil, a counselor who had delivered information to PC on the program, and Professor Shaw, one of Sean's marketing instructors who mentioned the opportunity in class. Eager to get interviewing experience and curious about the possibility of an internship, Sean pursued this lead, and was fortunate enough to be accepted as a Marketing Assistant within the company. This position is one which is unique to the Providence Agency, created by Barbara to bring students into the company through the entire sales cycle, learning about software, ledgers, and proposals. Discovering that he enjoyed what he was doing, Sean decided to take a licensing course at the end of the semester, spent the summer training and selling, and is now a college agent, employed by the Company, essentially his own boss, working a real job. He is currently working with a young family, helping them choose options for their future.

Today, it is simply not enough to have a college degree, and as Barbara O'Neil stresses, "when focusing on internships for students, we see that it is no longer a luxury, but a necessity in the struggle to succeed in life." Increasingly, internships provide the edge that will make the difference in getting a job before someone else. Internships can also provide answers, that is, whether or not a certain field is right for the individual. Whether or not a student decides to stay with the company they intern with, it has still enabled them to "get a foot in the door" and network for future business opportunities.

Sean himself realizes how fortunate he is, and knows that he really is "head and shoulders" above most students who are living in denial and hoping a job will fall into their laps, while others, like himself, are taking the initiative towards securing their futures. "It's the kids who go to college and have an internship, who will get a job in this competitive market," says Sean.

Ultimately, as both Sean and Barbara O'Neil agree, it's a "win-win" situation, in which the student gets academic credit and first-hand experience, the agent gets some free help, and the agency exposes more people to the firm. Both Barbara O'Neil and Sean emphasized that they love what they are doing, and that the firm is really a big family, headed by General Agent, Michael Matone (once an intern himself), who provides one-on-one care for his employees and is an enthusiastic supporter of the college program.

Northwestern's internship program provides real-life experience for students, and not just mindless paper pushing. Students may find some internships just to beef up their resume and learn little. Or they can take part in the program that Northwestern Mutual Life offers, really learn something and embark on a secure career path.

Sean is so much further ahead than the rest of us, who when questioned about our future plans, will respond that "being unemployed" will be our full-time profession. As Sean states, "I'm currently still in school, but I've also started a career in life insurance." Through his internship, Sean has discovered that he loves what he does and is excited about his future.

Maintaining his GPA is still his top priority, and incidentally, his grades have gone up since he joined the program. He attributes this to the fact that now in his business classes, he actually has something concrete to relate to, something which solidifies what he's learning. About this he states, "You learn a lot in your classes, however, I've learned much more about the business world and what my life will really be like through this internship, something I wouldn't have found in the classroom."

Interacting with Northwestern Mutual Life is not for everyone. However, if you are a motivated individual, are excited about the opportunity to work with people, and have some business background, you would do well to look into this program. If there is an opportunity for any kind of internship, never pass it up. Start looking during your freshman year, and realize that internships will be one of the keys to a successful future. In the long run, the advantages are plentiful, and the learning experience invaluable. Both Sean and Barbara are eager to answer any questions, so please call the Cowl office if you would like information. And there is always a wealth of knowledge in Career Services, or contact the Development Center today!

It's a typical occurrence at Providence College; vandal- ism and littering— it's everywhere. We have groups on campus designed for the beautification and upkeep of the surrounding neighborhood streets. But what do our own streets, lawns and buildings?

Walking around campus on a Sunday morning—any Sunday morning—there are certain things that stand out to me. This past weekend for example, walking out of Bedford Hall, I noticed an entire bag of Red Ore cookies spread out on all over the road in between Davis and Bedford Halls and saw empty bags lying on the bushes. And speaking of bushes, a few feet up on my walk, I saw a bush lying on the ground. Someone had pulled it up by the roots and tossed it down on the ground.

My destination being the Phillips Memorial Library, I continued walking. When I got near up the the Feinstein Academic Center, there were cardboard carrying-cases on the walkway between Feinstein and Joseph. I proceeded past Aquinas and McDermott Halls and no money to open the library. So I decided to change seats. I walked all the way around the second floor, looking for somebody. I will here call him John Doe (or should I say John Q.), felt compelled to write his name on almost all the desks in the library.

A while later I left the library and went over to Slavin. I wandered through all the waddled up paper and Ronnie's coupons to check my mailbox. I took our usual route back to Bedford, passing all of the same eyeglasses that I saw on my way there. In the lobby of Bedford was a sign advertising the Blackfrissors production of Meet Me In St. Louis on the third floor. I looked around the second floor for nothing at all. The plumbers had a box containing a new toilet in the corner near the elevator. There were two cans of soda and a bag from Burger King sitting on top of the toilet. I took the stairs up, noticing at least one classic Bud Light on every flight from the ground up to the fifth floor. I entered my next hall, looking for it. All you have to do is put the name of the topic you are discussing followed by a period after it. I called my Ave for nothing at all.

Finally. After staring at the computer screen for hours (or has it been days, weeks, years?), you have fin- ished your paper. It was only a 5-7 pager, but you have put every ounce of mental fortitude that you have into it. You have a strong thesis and have sup- ported it well with research, quotes, and your own brilli- ant insight. Your conclu- sion is impeccable. It per- fectly and precisely sums up the point you have been elaborating on for the previ- ous 90 pages. Now you can print it out, staple it, sit back and bask in the radiance of your very, very soon finished. Then, all too abruptly, you are struck with the realization that you have forgotten a title.

To some people, titles are the easiest part. They slap on a generic "Pap- er #2," or "My Hobo Dick Essay." But for those of us with any respect for our lab- ors and the creative import of a driving force of the uni- verse, such a lack of imag- nation hardly suffices.

In my career as an English major, I have come to really respect the role of the title.

We are forced to conform to too many restrictions in our papers: well developed par- graphs, strong sentences, and appropriately placed commas (trust me to avoid the dread- ed comma splice and dangling modifier. You can really let loose son in my intro to lit class my freshman year when I tried this same approach. The first college paper I ever wrote was on the John Updike story, "A&P." In my warped mind, it would be really funny if you called my Ave for nothing that Mind Your F's & Q's," based whole paper writing process, usually it is 5:30 in the morn- ing. You just want to go to bed, but you still need a title before you can call it a night.

All you have to do is put the name of the topic you are discussing followed by a period after it. I called my Ave for nothing at all.

The best approach to pa- per titles, I have found, is the intellectual approach. These are easily recognizable by their shear length and use of obscenely long and compli- cated words. Teachers love these, while your peers will scoff at you. Keep in mind, however, that it is your peers who will be deciding the fate of your grade in the class.

I was so proud of my first intellectual and lofty title, that I wanted to make t-shirts and signs with my new title: "The Multiplicity of Queeg's Coffin," and I felt so intelligent. Ever- yone should try to use a title like this at least once, if only for the sake of the ego-boost.

If it's not an English major come up with good titles, only someone with a creative intellect can give your paper that little extra boost that makes the difference between a "C+" or a "B." Many profes- sors might refute this state- ment, but experience has taught me that every little bit helps.

The Rutgers Invitational became the battleground for the men's tennis team this past weekend. In two of the four doubles flights, the Friars came out on top. Gagliardi/Weber in the "C" Flight and Ryan/Xiggorus in the "D" Flight. Freshman Felipe Vivar continued his winning ways, by capturing the "B" Flight in singles lifting his consecutive winning streak to seven matches, and his overall record to 10-3.

The Invitational consisted of four singles and four doubles flights. In the Flight "A" singles, Freshman #1, Dylan Williams won his first round match, before dropping a heartbreaking 6-3, 6-7, 6-7 duel to Richard Lange of Monmouth College. Paul Gagliardi, also in the "A" Flight, lasted a round longer, before bowing to Lange's teammate Neil Goldsby. In his second round match, "Cage" won a thrilling three-setter, 7-5, 6-7, 6-3.

Flight "B" belonged to Felipe Vivar. Coming off an exceptional weekend at the ECAC's, Vivar didn't miss a beat. He cruised to the final without dropping a set, and defeated Dan Adriano of St. John's University 8-2. The finals were played using the 8-game pro set for scoring, due to rain setbacks during the weekend. Coach LaBranche once again praised the play of Vivar, "He (Vivar) was very impressive, even brilliant, in defeating the former St. John's #1. This big win, along with his 10-3 record increases his chances of receiving an invitation to the Rolex Championships next weekend."

In the Flight "D" Finals John O'Neil lost to hometown favorite Anand Rao 8-3. O'Neil played incredible and even inspirational tennis throughout the draw, winning close sets and even defeated one of the host team's players.

Dylan Williams and Felipe Vivar were upset in their doubles Flight. After their tremendous efforts in the ECAC doubles, the first round loss appears to be a really big disappointment. The Friar Netmen picked up the slack in the Flight "C" and "D" doubles. Paul Gagliardi and John Weber mowed down the competition en route to a PC title in the "C" Flight. In the "D" Flight, freshmen duo Kevin Ryan and Jason Xiggorus won 8-5 in the final.

Dylan Williams will participate in the Rolex Championships on the weekend of November 4-6. He will gain an automatic bid, unlike his teammates, Paul Gagliardi and Felipe Vivar. If invited, they will have to qualify for the main draw. Of the 32 invited to play in the qualifying mini-tournament, only 8 will move to the main bracket. Coach LaBranche said that he was "lobbying for an automatic bid for Gagliardi, who he feels deserves such a spot because of his 10-5 record and quality wins." The main draw will consist of the 8 qualifiers and 56 automatic bids. The women's team has decided to bypass the Rolex Championships.

Moira Hamill and the goals as PC won 2-0 in what had the makings of a blowout. The winning goal was in the ninth minute and was in Maine territory the majority of the game. "We dominated in Maine. We created a lot of opportunities that we didn't even finish. However, we could not have gotten away with the way we played today (versus Harvard) in that game."

PC has two games remaining. Their goal remains to reach the hundred mark before the Big East Championship. This was the Big East Championship this year and could not achieve. Coach Hornish realizes the importance of the next two games. "Our goal is to be five-hundred at the end of these next two games. This would help us a lot going into the Big East's."

The Lady Friars have earned a third ranked seed within the tournament (2-2 Big East). As a result, PC will face second ranked Boston College in the first round on Saturday in St. John's. PC has to win their game to continue. PC was unable to place to score in their win over UConn.

PC's top points were in the first quarter when the game was tied at 1-1. PC has dominated both games this year and has earned a tie to finish the season.

PC's next game is on Saturday against the Blue Jays in the first round.

More important than the least important event, however, was the football game on Saturday, October 17th. The Lady Saints had earned the respect of their basketball counterparts, reaching the NCAA final four twice, and again soon for the tournament regularly. Unlike other clubs, the hockey team Assistant captain Jon LaVatre agrees with some of these previous problems: "In previous years, its as if we were never seen around campus. This is a way of showing the students that the hockey team is part of the school. Upon helping students dump their trays full of trash, LaVatre and his teammates hope that some of these students will dump their trays full of trash onto the ice when the Friars host Union College on Friday night for their home opener.

The Providence College men’s soccer team sunk to their lowest level yet this week as they were demolished by Connecticut for a third straight loss Thursday but managed to tie Villanova on Sunday.

The Friars, in an obvious rebuilding year, have fallen upon tough times. Injuries have ravaged Coach Bill Doyle’s line-up so much so that he is forced to play less experienced players putting the team at a huge disadvantage against the likes of such Big East powerhouses like St. John’s and Seton Hall.

We are struggling to score goals at all,” said Doyle. “Let alone be competitive. We have played poorly within our division and that hasn’t helped our cause much.”

Providence has been mired in an offensive drought for what seems the entire season. They have outscored the opposition by a margin of ten goals in games they have won. On the other hand, they have surrendered fifteen goals in games and scored only 7 in games they have lost.

On Thursday, the Friars went to battle Connecticut and probably goals and scored only 1 in games they have lost.

On Thursday, the Friars went to battle Connecticut and probably would’ve done themselves a favor if they hadn’t made the trip. PC gave up four goals in the first half of play prompting Coach Doyle to remove goalkeeper Mike Wright, and bring in Chris Ivanov for the second half. At half time, the Friars found themselves looking at a 4-0 score, making a big hill to climb against on of the Big East’s premier teams.

The second half was somewhat of an improvement over its predecessor but the Friars still let in another two goals to make it a 6-0 deficit. Providence managed just two shots on goal compared to UConn’s twenty.

The Huskies defense just proved to be too much for a makeshift Providence team decimated by injuries and uncertain about their ability to score on Big East teams.

Some games they just don’t come to play, but things get even harder when you play a UConn or a Hartford. The Friars’ offense does not have the weapons the other teams in the league have. In addition, many teams have a plethora of foreign-born players as opposed to PC which only has a handful.

On Sunday, Coach Doyle’s team played Villanova. The Friars put forth one of their best efforts to date against a Big East foe and played as if they were determined to come away victorious. The game went to overtime tied at one apiece as a result of the Friars superior effort on defense. No one could score in the time allotted so the result was a 1-1 tie. It was a win by but by the same token it was not a loss. The Friars had managed to play a Big East team and not lose for the first time this season.

The same token it was not a loss. The Friars had managed to play a Big East team and not lose for the first time this season.

The Friars record now stands at 4-9-1. With four regular season games remaining the best the Friars could do is finish at .500. But don’t count on that. This week PC plays Dartmouth and Holy Cross. Hopefully, their good effort against Villanova will be the catalyst for better things.
Friars Open To Mixed Results
PC Hockey Splits With Army and UVM on The Road

by Keith Christensen ’96
Sprouts Writer

College is supposed to be about learning. It certainly is for the PC men’s ice hockey team, who opened the season this past weekend, while still trying to learn new coach Paul Pooley’s system. The Friars dropped an 8-0 decision at the University of Vermont Sunday after opening the season with a 6-3 win over Army. Coach Pooley understands that “It will take a little time” for the players to get comfortable with the changes made this year. “With the new system, people are still a little unsure of what they’re supposed to do”, continued Pooley.

PC’s difficulties showed up against a strong UVM team. The Friars played well early on, but the Catamounts got on the scoring board, when a shot dribbled through Bob Bell’s leg, causing things to come undone. With David Green and Brady Kramer in the penalty box, UVM scored their first of five power play goals. The Wildcats added a third to take a 3-0 advantage into the first period termination. “When things go astray”, said alternate captain George Breen, “you tend to go back to what you remember, rather than what you just learned.”

After the surging Catamounts scored a controversial 6th goal with one minute remaining in the 2nd period, goalie Bob Bell, who made 20 saves, vehemently protested that the puck never crossed the goal line. The officials ignored Bell’s pleas, however, though Pooley emphasized with his goalie’s outburst: “He’s so competitive and intense. That’s what you have to admire in him. It’s what makes him a good goaltender. He never gives up.”

Sophomore Dan Dennis replaced Bell in net for the final 21 minutes. UVM scored their last 2 goals, both on the power play, to hand PC its worst loss since November 1988. “PC’s inability to stop the Catamount power play was the key to the game,” penalty calling was obviously not very good, said a candid Pooley, “and I’ll take responsibility for that, because we didn’t go over a lot of that.”

An inability to capitalize on their own power play also hurt the Friars. While UVM was 5/8 with an advantage on the ice, the Friars failed to net a goal in eight tries of their own. The Friars had some scoring chances, but UVM netminder Tim Thomas was superb in collecting the shot. Coach Pooley expects the Friars’ special teams play to improve, “because we’ll start emphasizing it.”

The Paul Pooley era began one night earlier with a win at West Point. PC got its first goal of the season when David Green put the puck off a rebound after Chad Quenneville was stopped late in the first period. PC lengthened its lead to 2-0 in 2nd period and Quenneville and Breen combined on a pretty give and go early in a frantic second period. Army rebounded to score two goals in two and a half minutes off Dan Dennis. PC regained the lead for good when freshman John Tuchy scored into the net. Tuchy, who almost didn’t make the trip due to an NCAA mix-up, had arrived in New York just two hours before face-off. Junior Jay Kenney put in what proved to be the game-winner twenty six seconds later off an assist from Kramer. PC extended the lead to 5-2 at 10:19 of the third when Stefan Brannare scored. Army answered a minute later, moving to within 5-3, but Dennis, who had a strong night in net, shutout the Black Knights the rest of the way. Brady Kramer’s pass gave Green a breakaway with a minute remaining, and the sopho-more connected to close the scoring.

Pooley still hasn’t decided on a #1 goaltender. “Although Dan played well this weekend, I haven’t seen enough of either goalies to make a decision, but I would like to have a #1 man. Pooley switched his lines around in both games in an attempt “to find chemistry to see who played well together”

With the home opener versus Union College awaiting on Friday, the Friars are excited about the next weekend. Coach Pooley acknowledges that “It’s a big weekend for us. Nobody is dwelling on the loss to UVM. It’s not so discouraging because the effort was there. Effort is not the problem, it’s just a matter of channeling it into the system. Those guys are going to get them.”

Dan Dennis echoed his coach’s sentiments: “It’s a new coach, new system, it’s a learning process. It’s going to take time to get going.”

Providence was defeated by Syracuse 3-2, leaving them ranked at number four in the single elimination championship tournament. This will match them against the number one seeded in their opening game.

At Syracuse, freshmen goal tender Jamie Soteraides made nine saves in effort to stop the powerful attacks of the home team. Syracuse was awarded thirteen penalty corners, including nine in the second half. Their first goal was scored halfway through the opening period. Goals two and three were scored within a two minute surge midway through the second half. PC was able to register eight shot on the opposition's goalie, however she was successful in stopping all of them.

Sunday the Lady Friars traveled from Syracuse to Hamilton, New York to play Colgate University. After their letdown from the previous day, Providence just couldn't bring their game up to the level at which they are capable of playing. The host team took advantage of this and the fact that the visitors had a long bus trip to the game, and were able to pull out a 2-0 victory over PC. Colgate scored one goal in each half and their defense held off any Friar attempts to record the shutout.

Providence finished out their home action today at Hendrickson Field against Springfield College. The girls will be on the road this weekend as they meet UNH on Saturday in Durham, New Hampshire. Sunday they will challenge the Lady Rams from the University of Rhode Island in Kingston. This weekend will bring the regular season for the 1994-95 team to a close. Their record now stands at 9-8 overall and 2-3 in Big East play.

The Greatest World Series That Ever Wasn't

by Peter Keteleaz '97
Sports Writer

Well, thanks to the owners and the players this year, three more were binned, without a doubt, the greatest post-season ever. But let's forget about trivial labor disputes for a while and just meditate on the game. Is there anyone out there going through World Series withdrawal? I know a few of you. I myself have been unable to sleep due to the missing element that makes fall complete. So, I will tell you how the 1994 season really came to its riveting climax in the heat of yet another thrilling post-season battle.

The 1994 regular season ended with a bang as the New York Yankees, Cleveland Indians, and the first team ever to win a division with a sub-.500 record the Texas Rangers, clinched titles with the Chicago White Sox getting the wild card berth. The National League saw the Montreal Expos, Cincinnati Reds, and San Diego Giants, who defeated long-standing rival Los Angeles in the final game of the season to clinch the western division. The Atlanta Braves, with their third best secord in baseball advanced to the playoffs as the National League Wild Card.

In round one of the playoffs, the Expos had a short work of Cleveland sweeping three straight from the Indians to advance to play the Texas Rangers whose pitching proved just too much for Big Red Sox. Meanwhile Montreal's booming bats overcame the Red Sox in four games. Thanks to Francisco's Barry Bonds and Matt Williams, who clinched the Montreal sweep and ace John Wetteland who was brought in to face Yankee pinch-hitter Danny Tartabull, the town promptly gave it a double edge to play the end game. Montreal took game one by a final score of 7-1. Game two was a sharp contrast in style to game one. The fireworks began when Pat Kelly and Mike Gallo hit back to back homers in the top of the third off Montreal starter Jeffassio to give New York a 2-1 lead. The Expos responded in the bottom of the fourth when Canadian-born slinger Larry Walker hit a towering three run blast off the roof of Olympic stadium giving them a 5-2 advantage. In the seventh, Expo centerfielder Moines Alou, son of Montreal Manager Felipe Alou, drove in three runs with a bases loaded double to make it a 2- game in favor of the Expos. That brought the score to the top of the ninth with the Yankees at bat. Expo reliever Mel Rojas surrendered singles to Bernie Williams, Wade Boggs, and Mike Stanley before Yankee Captain Don Mattingly strode to the plate with one out and his team trailing by four runs. Mattingly sent a quick strike that backed Mattingly and brought about a pinch hit from the Yankeee dugout to the pitcher. The next two pitches were marginally better than walks or balls so the count went to two balls and two strikes. Mattingly sent the next pitch deep to the opposite field for a grand slam tying the game at six all and winning New York a new life.

The game went to extra innings when Mattingly doubled in Bernie Williams with one out in the eleventh inning to give New York a 7-6 lead. Montreal was managed to get a runner as far as second base before being shut down by Yankee reliever Jeff Driskill. But the town promptly gave it a double edge to play the end game again. Montreal took game one by a final score of 7-1. Game two was a sharp contrast in style to game one. The last home game of the season on Wednesday, the PC Lady Friar soccer team capitalized early to defeat Harvard 1-0. This improved their overall record to 7-3-1, still enabling PC to finish third in the conference. This game also will be remembered as the final time seniors Moira Harrington and Marilyn Pompeo (fourth all-time PC point leader) would compete on the field.

The game for the first five minutes was all Harvard, until PC got its first offensive chance and capitalized nine minutes into the first half. The goal was the result of Alake Wyoocke one-timing a pass from Moira Harrington to the right corner of the net. This was enough for PC to defeat the Crimson in a tight and evenly matched affair. Harvard appeared the aggressor from the beginning, but it was obvious by half time that one goal was going to decide the game. PC did face a scare in the last five minutes of the game.

Harvard hit the crossbar from twenty yards away and just missed wide right in front of the net on a separate occasion.

The Harvard game was not the best PC has performed this year, but the Lady Friars did enough for the victory. "We played well with a lot of composure, but at times a little lackluster. We could not have gotten away with that in Maine. We did create more opportunities in the first half," commented Coach Hornish.

PC's performance was the exact opposite in comparison to the Maine contest last Saturday. In this match PC was the obvious aggressor, allowing only one shot the entire contest. Heather Song and Erin Valla have been a contributing factor for the Lady Friars this season.

The Providence Women's Volleyball team is 17-5 (5-3 in the Big East). Now that you know it, forget it. It's now a three game season for the Lady Friars, who boat Hartford, Saturday, 3-1, Tuesday night, and last at UConn, 3-0, on Saturday.

That's the number of conference games they have left. If they win them all, the Lady Friars will be at Seton Hall November 21-20, playing in the Big East tournament. Two of those three games will be this weekend at Alumni Hall. The Friars, who currently holds the 4th position PC covets, comes to town Friday night, followed Saturday by Syracuse, who is tied with PC. The importance of the two game is not lost on Coach Debbie Matejka. "It's the biggest weekend of the season," she says simply.

PC tuned up for the weekend with a 15-5, 8-15, 15-7, 15-9 win over Hartford. The Friars used 14 aces, including three by Heidi Brady, to beat the Hawks for the second time this year. Aileen Kuprowski was one of three Lady Friars who recorded double figures in kills, with 15. Jocelyn Cole had 12 and Kelly Tooley had 10. Marnie Panek racked up 55 assists. Mostly, PC worked on preparing for the weekend. "We concentrated on correcting minor problems. We hit the ball very well," Coach Matejka commented.

The win over Hartford followed a disappointing loss to UConn... PC lost 15-11, 15-13, 12-15, despite breaking over all three teams also in the running for the 4th spot. The cheerleaders, pep band, and, hopefully a large home crowd, will turn out for the two matches. "We have the advantage. We're at home. We're prepared. Our defense and our coverage are getting better," Matejka said. This is PC's chance; they are, quite simply, in control of their own destiny. Matejka knows exactly what her team has to do. "We need to play pure, hard volleyball. The bottom line is, we need to beat both of these teams."
