ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The preparation of this Inventory and its accompanying Index involved the talents of many individuals. I would be remiss if I did not single out Dr. Paul van K. Thomson, Academic Vice President of Providence College, for his encouragement and coordination of the project; Mr. Albert T. Klyberg, Director of the Rhode Island Historical Society, for his generous advice on technical questions; Mr. Paul F. O'Malley, Dr. Patrick T. Conley, and Mr. Stephen P. Cross, faculty colleagues, for their aid in preparing the copy for printing; Mr. Paul J. Richards and Mr. Robert Norton, student assistants, for the tedious hours they spent arranging documents, boxing materials, and performing other innumerable tasks; and especially Miss Jane M. Jackson, project secretary, for two years of dedicated service which helped to create the following pages.

INTRODUCTION

The papers of Congressman John Edward Fogarty were presented to Providence College by his wife, Mrs. Luise M. Fogarty, in March, 1967.

John E. Fogarty served in the United States House of Representatives for twenty-six years (1941-1967) representing Rhode Island's Second Congressional District. His distinguished career was highlighted by a tireless promotion of programs to improve and safeguard the nation's health. As Chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee for the Departments of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare, Mr. Fogarty actively encouraged the Federal government to support and initiate health programs. During his tenure on the Appropriations Committee the budget of the National Institutes of Health increased from approximately 3 million to 1.4 billion dollars. Fogarty's name was associated with virtually every important piece of health legislation that passed through Congress between 1949 and 1966. His legislative leadership and humanitarianism earned him the title "Mr. Public Health." The Congressman also championed the rights of labor, increased aid to education and library services, and the expansion of programs in the arts and humanities.

After an initial survey of the Fogarty Collection's contents, Providence College officials concluded that the historical value of the papers was so important that an effort should be made to open them to scholarly research at the earliest possible opportunity. With this goal in mind, they approached the National Library of Medicine with a proposal for a two-year cooperative archival project that would yield an inventory and index to the Collection. The College and the National Library of Medicine signed a contract in March, 1968, under which the Library provided support for the undertaking, and in return the College agreed to make copies of the inventory and index available for inclusion in the Library's collection of historical materials. Thus, a partnership was forged in the interest of historical research on health legislation.

Work on the collection began in September, 1968. It was immediately evident that three major problems had to be resolved before classification could begin. First, storage procedures had disarranged the collection's original filing order. Second, approximately two-thirds of the correspondence had been stapled together in groups of two to fifty pieces. Third, all of the correspondence was either in reverse chronological order or in scattered series covering brief time periods.

The first condition was remedied through consultation with former members of Mr. Fogarty's staff. They graciously provided the necessary information on office filing procedures. The various categories and their folders were then reconstructed to reflect the working arrangement used during the Representative's thirteen terms in the House. This reorganization guaranteed that the historical integrity of the papers would not be violated. The second obstacle, the staples, proved to be the most vexing. To remove every fastener would have almost doubled the contract period. Therefore, an effort was made to remove only those staples which bound significant correspondence or inordinately large groupings. Finally, it was decided, in the interest of historical research, to reorder the entire correspondence of the collection in chronological sequence.

To accomplish these goals, the collection was divided into eight major categories representing original staff classifications. Because the same classifications and topic headings were often used. Year after year, there was much duplication of folders on the same topics or individuals. These identical subject and individual folders were consolidated and then reordered, usually alphabetically, in their respective categories. The arrangement of the Department, General and Miscellaneous Legislation, Miscellaneous, Position, Special, and Subject Folders are primary examples of this procedure. For the Fogarty Legislation and Speeches classifications, little reorganization was required. The major challenge of these categories was one of selection, due to the preponderance of health subjects.

In addition to the inventory, an index of approximately ten thousand cards has been prepared to facilitate scholarly research in the collection. This index provides not only a subject guide, but also a detailed listing of the Congressman's major correspondence. Each correspondent's communication was summarized and received an appropriate symbol to facilitate its retrieval. Particular emphasis was placed upon correspondence pertaining to health subjects.

The John E. Fogarty Papers consist of five hundred and thirty manuscript boxes and forty-eight Paige boxes (12" x 24" x 10"). The approximately 459,000 pieces are retained in 11,473 acid-free folders. In addition to the Congressional working files, the Collection includes sixty-five thousand record cards maintained by the Congressman's staff; approximately five thousand pictures pertaining to the Congressman's career; two hundred and fifty published volumes consisting mainly of government documents; and miscellaneous memorabilia. All of these materials will help scholars to interpret Mr. Fogarty and his remarkable career. In short, the collection offers a unique view of an important aspect of mid-century American government, politics, and life.

MISCELLANEOUS FOLDERS

Containers 1-3
Folders 159-389
Academy Applications 1941-1967, 8128 pieces.
Folders contain correspondence relating to JEF's appointments to the various military academies.

Boxes 1-22
Folders 1-158
Campaign Folders 1940-1966, 6587 pieces.
These folders contain correspondence, speeches, biographical material, lists of campaign workers, clippings, and other material relating to JEF's fourteen election campaigns for the United States House of Representatives. These folders reflect JEF's positions on various National and local questions. Boxes 1-15 contain JEF's folders on each of his campaigns. Boxes 16-22 contain material labeled campaign subjects. These subjects are alphabetically listed from "advertising gimmicks" to "volunteer workers."

Container 3
Folders 390-448
Endorsements 1953-1966, 3142 pieces.
These folders contain letters separated by JEF's staff because of their laudatory remarks about the Congressman and his accomplishments. Included are letters from many public and private medical associations and individuals, fellow members of Congress, cabinet members, and other notable individuals.

Containers 4, 5
Folders 454-573
Miscellaneous Military Service 1941-1948, 10176 pieces.
Folders contain correspondence pertaining to the special problems of the War and postwar periods, such as transfers, dependants, and discharges.
In these folders JEF's staff kept all correspondence requesting aid in obtaining employment or advancement in various positions.

The folders are listed chronologically and the correspondence is divided alphabetically.

Much of this material is very personal. Therefore, only limited access will be permitted.

This record group refers to subjects JEF considered to be of immediate importance during his Congressional career. As a result of this immediacy, JEF's staff created a "Special" folder. These Specials deal with topics or individuals on the National, State or local level.

Folders are divided into two groups; the division was determined primarily by the significant break in JEF's career, his appointment to the House Appropriations Committee. The first grouping encompasses roughly the years 1940-1949 with topics arranged alphabetically. This alphabetical system is also utilized in the second group, which covers the years 1949-1967.

Because there are over a thousand topic headings in this record group, a detailed description of each is prohibitive. Therefore, a general description of major areas is provided along with a listing of the original folder headings used by JEF's staff. (Some of the headings have been expanded from the original for the sake of clarity.)

Boxes 1-16
Folders 1-150 1940-1949
Folders pertain primarily to individuals and companies seeking JEF's aid and to Rhode Island topics. A small number deal with National issues. Folders pertaining to individual constituents have been grouped together and are listed as "Private."

Boxes 17-92
Folders 151-1142 1949-1967
This section contains the more important Specials of JEF's career. They refer to health fields, Rhode Island politics and various National programs. Material on politics and Rhode Island political personalities are contained in folders such as Fogarty for Senator, Democratic State Committee, etc. Also included are folders containing originals and copies of JEF's correspondence with the Presidents and their cabinets.

Several Specials refer to specific Federal programs and their operation. Among them are public works and the Peace Corps. Several folders also relate to Rhode Island agencies for Federal programs, for example, Progress for Providence, Neighborhood Youth Corps, and Housing and Urban Development. JEF's relations with Rhode Island cities and towns, educational institutions and state agencies are chronicled by folders under the appropriate topic headings.

As before, folders relating to constituents are grouped under the "Private" listing.

Biographical information on JEF is available in folders marked John E. Fogarty ...
